

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennal and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennal and eGangotri-CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

पुस्तकालय जांगज़ी विश्वविद्यालय

34 हिरिद्वार

जा.सं..... वितरण की तिथि नीचे अंकित है। इस १५वें दिन तक यह पुस्तक पुस्तकालध जानी चाहिए। अन्यथा ५ पैसे प्रतिदिन लम्ब-दण्ड लगेगा। 17322

प्रमाधीकर्ग उट्टर-१६८४

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri For CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Calcutta Oriental Series, No. 14. E. 8

Early History

OF THE

SPREAD OF BUDDHISM

AND THE

BUDDHIST SCHOOLS

BY

NALINAKSHA DUTT, M. A., B. L.,

Premchand Roychand Scholar, Calcutta University, Formerly Professor, Judson College, Rangoon, Lecturer in Pali and Ancient Indian History and Culture, Calcutta University.

WITH A FOREWORD

BA

NARENDRA NATH LAW, M. A., B. L., P. R. S., PH. D.

LUZAC & Co.

46, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, LONDON, W. C. 1.

TO THE MEMORY OF

THE LATE Sir Asutosh Mookerjee

THE CHAMPION OF THE CAUSE OF HIGHER EDUCATION

THE TRUE FRIEND OF SCHOLARS

THE INITIATOR OF THE STUDY OF PALI IN BENGAL

THIS HUMBLE WORK IS DEDICATED

AS A TOKEN OF THE AUTHOR'S DEEP GRATITUDE AND ESTEEM

fo in ti bi ci ar fu a to m C W is s C a t > e s I

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

FOREWORD

The first portion of this work analyses the forces that helped the propagation of Buddhism in India, and delineates the missionary activities of Buddha in detail. There are scholarly biographies of the great Teacher touching incidentally on topics connected with his missionary activities, but a biography cannot give the fullest scope for the presentation of such an account. It is only a book devoted exclusively to the subject that can do justice to its treatment, and so Mr. Dutt's work is welcome as a compendium where all information connected with the progress of Buddha's missionary work is available in a well-ordered form. Such sketch, the details of which have been laboriously collected from the Buddhist scriptures and arranged in such a way as to enable one to see the large masses of details about Buddha's career in their logical and chronological relations as far as possible, has certainly a value in the eye of scholars interested in the history of the spread of Buddhism. The attempt on the part of Buddha and his disciples to preach the doctrines of the religion and propagate it far and wide involved arduous work from village to village, h

al

m

W

W

S

li

a

T

0

r

S o

a

S

a

I

b

t

υ

t

t

1

8

t

Ċ

E

and district to district, each locality presenting problems which had to be solved as best as they could by bringing to bear on them the application of the best qualities of head and heart that the personalities of Buddha and his disciples possessed. These and similar points can be properly tackled only in professed accounts of the spread of Buddhism and not in biographies of Buddha, where they may not find at all a logical setting. The degree of influence of Buddhism at a particular centre, the volume of patronage offered to the religion, the nature of collisions that took place between Buddhism and various other religions and such like can be treated with adequate justice to their importance only in a treatise directly and expressly devoted to the delineation of the subject.

A detailed delineation of the four principal schools of Buddhism including resumés of their doctrines as far as they have been ascertained at present is the object of Book II. The study of either the Pāli or the Buddhist Sanskrit literature can give only a partial view of Buddhism, as such literature embodies the beliefs and doctrines of one or two schools of Buddhism which in time attained dominance in India over the other schools. The discovery and publication of a large number of works belonging to the Pāli and the Buddhist Sanskrit literature

ting they licathat iples be ts of hies all a e of ne of re of and n be ance roted cipal s of ascer-II. dhist view the ls of ce in y and nging ature have brought so much into prominence the tenets and philosophy of one or two schools that one may be misled to think that they constitute the whole of Buddhism. But there were other schools which had their days of prosperity in India at some time or other in the past, and possessed literature, of which traces are available in the accounts of Chinese travellers, and in the Tibetan or Chinese translations of works of some of them. The Sammitīva school, for instance, rose to be a dominant school in the sixth and seventh centuries A. C. in regard to the number of adherents and range of propagation. There are indications, again, showing that the schools arising out of the Mahāsanghika school acquired at one time much influence in Southern India. The followers of each of the schools believed that they preserved more faithfully than the rest the words of Buddha and were acting up to their spirit more than others. Each of the schools professed to preserve intact, or make the nearest approximation to the words and thoughts of the Teacher in and through its literature and practices. Each of them is thus, as it were, a facet of a diamond contributing its mite to the totality of the brilliance, and cannot be left out of sight in a view of the entire diamond. Mr. Dutt in his sketches of the four principal schools has taken a stock of the information available at present, enabling a reader ul, to acquaint himself without much labour with one what is now known about the schools. The rag portions of the sketches bearing on the origin, and development, and activities of the schools have far been drawn by Mr. Dutt for the first time from the existing materials.

iv

The importance of the knowledge of details over about the schools of Indian Buddhism is also isce realized if we look at the fact that it enables us by to understand clearly the forms of the religiou whe that were transplanted from India to other)r s countries. As I have stated elsewhere, when the missionary activities of the Buddhists were ron carried outside India, the school of Buddhism cti which happened to be the most prominent at acce particular time sent its missionaries for propariti gating it in other countries. The people of the im country where they went looked upon the form s of Buddhism preached by them as the original bs form of the religion and adopted it, zealously 5 v preserving its literature and doctrines. As an n illustration, I mention first the Sinhalese. AtBu the time when the Sthaviravada school reached ey the acme of its influence, Ceylon was converted, ed and as the result of this conversion, the literature lig of this school has been preserved in that country. If Similarly, when under the patronage of Kaniska, hr the Sarvāstivāda school became the most powerV with converted to Buddhism; for this reason, the The ragments of manuscripts discovered in course of rigin, acavations in those places belong mostly to the have Sarvāstivādins. The case of the Sāmmitīyas is from the similar; though no manuscripts (or their ragments) of this school have yet been distatally overed, the people of Campā, so far as has been etails overed, the people of Campā, so far as has been also scertained, were first converted to Buddhism es us y the missionary efforts of Sāmmitīya preachers, igiou when this school prevailed in India in the sixth other)r seventh century A. c.

the I appreciate very much the point of view were rom which the author looks at Buddha and his hism ctivities. Though he is writing an historical at account, in which the canons of historical ropa-riticism should be applied, he is at the same the ime not unmindful of the fact that he is handling form subject involving topics about which, in the ginal basence of a better alternative, respectful silence busly; welcome instead of barren sceptical criticisms.

AtBuddha, there may be many things which lie ched eyond the comprehension of people unacquainted, ed with the ways of men in the higher or the tighest stages of spiritual culture. A means of at least partially comprehending them is through an intimate knowledge of the actions, apabilities, and lines of thought of men actually advanced in spiritual culture, supplemented by the perusal of authoritative works garnering the past experiences of people on the subject elucidating its obscure points, or furnishing nt corroboration of the known ones. Attemptatte are often made by authors to thrust into narrounf t moulds of their own making personalities like ing Christ and Muhammad, Buddha and Caitanya, nd The present work is free from a blemish of this nd kind. It is also free from another blemishau which so often tarnishes historical monographlhis on particular religions viz. a dominating preon conceived notion that the religion professed bad the author is superior to the religion treated pro the monograph. This blinds him to many wor the excellences of the latter religion which online a deep sympathetic insight into it can malihe patent, and prompts him to institute composit risons between the two religions to exalt the one over the other. I hope that Mr. Dutt's wor'y with its many attractive features, some of which have been pointed out above, has before it career of usefulness, which will render it welcome addition to the existing literature ore Buddha and his activities. Vi

vi

April, 1925.
96, Amherst Street,
CALCUTTA.

96, Amherst Street, NARENDRA NATH LAV

nz

PREFACE

bject The perusal of Rev. Edkins' remarks in his ishin Introduction to the Chinese Buddhism drew my emptattention to the subject-matter of the first book arrowf this work. The remarks are: "If the begins likelings of the world's religions are very interesting tanyaind important subjects of inquiry, their progress of this nd development are not less so. The various emislauses which operated to aid the spread of Budgraphlhism if carefully investigated will be a valuable g preentribution to the history of humanity." ed badkins had in his mind the whole history of the ted spread of Buddhism in the different parts of the my world. As the task is stupendous, I have cononfined myself only to India and, for the present, to malihe earliest portion of the history. The sources ompof my information have been naturally the lt the Vinaya and the Nikāyas supplemented at times s words works.

Though there is a great divergence of opinion which it is to the date of compilation of the Pāli Nikāyas, it is of little importance to me so far as the reatment of the subject-matter of this work is oncerned, because the tradition contained in the Vikāyas is old and it is upon this tradition that ny account has been based.

H LAV

ented

erino

There are indications in the Nikāyas show he that the tradition recorded in them dates be as far as the time of Buddha, to whom ascribed almost all the discourses embodied the Collections.

The picture of the religious condition so Northern India furnished by the Nikāyas had in it a tinge of great antiquity. We find list quent delineations of the state of things thus immediately preceded the advent of Buddlay or existed during his life-time. We see them Mahāvīra has established his influence, Makkhar Gosāla has placed his order of monks on a final footing, a host of religious sects with their divided gent beliefs and philosophical theories has boe struggling with one another for recognition as the repositories of truths, while brāhmaṇi is has reached a stage in which reaction has become a necessity.

The numerous parallels in the Nikāyas in cate that their subject-matter was drawn from an early common source. The differences amount the Nikāyas are not so much in substance in form. This is due to the fact that differences are groups of reciters called the Dīgha-bhāṇakal Majjhima-bhāṇakas, etc. (Sum. Vil. p. preserved the sacred words of Buddha in form which was looked upon by each group he most suitable for the purpose. The similarity es basis substance among the Nikāyas of the different om roups would not have been so great as it died ctually is, if they had not been based upon common foundation, viz., the words of Buddha tion s far as they could be preserved in oral tradiyas ion. In the existing works on the early find istory of Buddhism, chiefly the biographies of ngs thuddha in Pāli, Sanskrit and other languages Buddlave been utilized. The Nikāyas have not see theen utilized to the full to yield the informa-Takkhon they contain. It was for this reason n a finat Prof. Kern following Oldenberg remarked ir diviat "after the narrative of the occurrences in has boe twentieth rainy season, there is in the history ognitt the Master an almost complete blank. For nmaṇi period of 23 years, a summary of Buddha's becoroceedings is wanting, although various incidents ay be held to fall within that period" (Manual, yas in 38). It is true that it is not possible to draw vn fro an account of Buddha's activities for the last s amo years of his career, arranging the incidents tance ar by year, but nevertheless the utilization of differe information contained in the Nikāyas can hānakake it possible to present a sketch which may

p. suseful in various ways.

Book II of the present work has been devotto the treatment of the four schools of

iv

Buddhism that came into being within ab his four centuries after Buddha's parinirvāņa ha were alive up to the end of the mediæval pericing The materials available for an account of tha origin and development of these schools inclust ing their tenets and philosophical views be not enable one to satisfy his curiosity about H their details, but they can well be utilized w the drawing up of a sketch which can convit a clear idea of all the four schools with vit distinguishing features of each of them. To meth this sketch richer in details, it is necessary en have access to the store of information containing in the hitherto unused Chinese and Tibe It is a matter for regret that I could the translations of the works of these schools.

It is a matter for regret that I could the complete this volume during the life-time puthe great man Sir Asutosh Mukherji to initiated the study of Pāli in Bengal, inflay into me as he did into so many others a degree for historical researches, and pointed out a me the importance of spade-work in the unworked field of Buddhism. My labour we have been amply repaid if this volume complete have elicited from him a single word of apparation. No less is my debt of gratitude of Dr. Narendra Nath Law a silent but never less an ardent and untiring worker in the field ab historical researches. It is from him that ina have got the training for carrying on historical pericinvestigations on scientific lines, and it is he who of thas guided me most patiently, almost at every inclustep, to keep me away from the quicksands that ews beset the onward course of students of history. out He has laid me under a further obligation by ized writing a foreword to this book, and including con it in his Calcutta Oriental Series, without which ith vit could not have seen the light. My hearty To m thanks are due to Dr. B. M. Barua who has encouraged me in various ways in the course of ontain my labours and has given me occasionally the Tibe benefit of his valuable suggestions. Lastly, I nust thank my friend Mr. N. C. Paul, B. L., for uld his keen active interest in the progress of this time vork and Mr. Nirmal Chandra Barua, B. A., for is brother-like help in diverse ways. I also take his opportunity of expressing my gratitude to inft ay Mr. R. N. Seal, B. A., for piloting this book a de 3 hrough the press with promptitude.

he 3 3 r WarCALCUTTA, 1925

NALINAKSHA DUTT

e ccie f appal tude ever

field

ji

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CONTENTS

Foreword

Preface

Book I-Early History of the Spread of Buddhism

1			Page
t	I	Internal forces in the spread of Buddh	ism 1
1	II	External forces	27
I		Spread of Buddhism in n	II	Magadha	82
	eV	Kosala	129
9	V	Territories of the Democracies	155
	I'si	Other Eastern Countries	169
n	IP	Western and Northern Countries	182
DO		ook II—Schools of Buddhism
ıy	I	Evolution of the Schools of Buddhism	197
3	II	Mahāsanghika School	225
8	II	Theravāda School	249
	V	Sarvāstivāda School	266
a	r V	Sāmmitīya School	297
e		Index	303

BOOK I Spread of Buddhism

(Mainly based on the Nikāyas)

T

11

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The Internal Forces in the Spread of Buddhism

The rise of Buddhism took place at an epoch n not only India but also Greece, Persia and China were experiencing a stir in religious matters through the thism in advent of Socrates with his dispoch of tinguished pupils and contemporary ening. philosophers in Greece, of Zoroaster 'ersia, and of Lao-tse and Confucius in China. India the elaboration of the brahmanic fices accompained with the killing dreds of victims had already run a long course the beginning of the sixth century B.C., ring into a highly complex system of lism, the details of which failed to command aith of many a Hindu who began to question her, after all, the offerings to the gods, their laborious construction of altars and ction of numberless requisites, recitations antras, chanting of hymns, expiation of s in the rituals, really achieved the objects which they were performed, and whether, all, they were worth the time, energy, and expenses that were involved in their performance? The sacrifices were believed, if rightly performed. as able to secure for them wealth, health, long life and strength, the good will and good grace of the gods in this world, and happiness in the other world. But the dubious among them began to question within themselves whether there was not the chance of this belief being wrongly based. Side by side with the elaborate sacrifices performed by the householders, there were prescribed shortened forms of them, or even mere cogitation of the Supreme, unaccompanied with any rituals for the vanaprasthas and the yatis. If these latter were right in the pursuit of the course prescribed for them, could not a similar course suited to the masses, but devoid of, or accompanied only with very simple rituals, be prescribed for the householders? Similar views, more or less developed and opposed to the karmakānda of the Brāhmanas and specially to the cruel slaying of animals in the sacrifices, were already in the air before Buddha arose to preach his docrines.1 Brāhmaņism allowed various shades of philosophic and religious views to grow up within its fold

I See Dr. B. M. Barua, Pre-Buddhistic Indian Philosophy, pp. 193, 194.

INTERNAL FORCES

without taking objection to their existence within its limits. But the key to the reception of this toleration lay in the fact that the dissentient view, side by side with its opposition to one or more brahmanic doctrines, showed its allegiance to one or more of the ultimate fundamental tenets of Brāhmanism such as the affiliation to the Vedas, belief in their authority, worship of any of the brahmanic gods as such, recognition of the authority of the brahmanas, or compliance with the caste-system. It is only when we keep this in view that we can understand how the sects like Cārvākas or Sānkhyas could hold to their doctrines and yet continue to to be recognized by the brahmanas as orthodox. The elasticity of Brāhmaņism was, no doubt, a source of its strength, and the existence of this toleration that admitted of the tether, by which a sect was tied to its peg, to be drawn and drawn away to long distance without severance, was the cause by which Brāhmanism could grow into a ramified religion, as wide as the Indian continent. But there was a limit to the degree to which the heresy of its views could be carried by a brahmanic sect as such. This limit was crossed by Buddha, who stood up as a rock to stop the flow of the religion in order to direct the faiths of the people along channels of his own. He

Ve

fic

of

th

pr

we

m

br

tit

tic

K

B

tic

th

th

pe

ex

w]

w

Su

by an

4

preached that religious truths lay, not in the sacrifices, not in the Vedas which prescribed these sacrifices, not in the worship of the rany deities of the brāhmaṇic pantheon, not in the observance of the caste-rules, not in the magical practices of the Atharva Veda, not in the extreme forms of self-mortifications, and not, in short, in the many other pet beliefs and practices that came as corollaries to an allegiance to the bases of brāhmaṇic faiths, but in self-culture 'culminating in Arhatship' which constitutes the key-stone of Buddhism.¹

Buddha's views against sacrifices and the rites or acts involved in them have been

Buddha's views against sacrifices:

expressed in no uncertain terms throughout his sayings. Against the memorising of the Vedic mantra and their fruitless repetitions to retain them in memory, he tauntingly remarked that the brāhmanas were nothing but the repeaters of the hymns composed by the ancient sages such as Aṭṭhaka, Vāmaka, Vāmadeva,

I Cf. "For the first time in the history of the world, it proclaimed a salvation which each man could gain for himself in this world, during this life, without any the least reference to God or to gods, either great or small." Dr. Rhys Davids, Hibbert Lectures, p. 29.

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Vessāmitta, etc1. He also disparaged the sacrifices involving needless expenses and payments of heavy fees2 to brāhmanas who, by dint of their craftiness, made them the means of procuring wealth for themselves3. The rituals were meaningless operations so minutely but mechanically complied with by the sacrificing brāhmaṇas4, intending to keep their superstitious clients under a perpetual and unquestioning tutelage. In the Pāyāsi Suttanta, 5 Garage Kumāra Kassapa an immediate disciple of Buddha instructs Prince Pāyāsi that the celebration of sacrifices without cruelty involved in mach the killing of victims is a degree better than the celebration thereof accompanied with the perpetration of that cruelty. A similar view is expressed by Buddha in the Kūţadanta Sutta6 where mention is made of sets of rituals to which toleration can be shewn in the ascending

<sup>1</sup> Majjh. Nik., II, p. 169; Dīgh. Nik., I, Tevijja Sutta; Prof. Oldenberg's Buddha, pp. 172, 173.

<sup>2</sup> Dīgh. Nik., I, p. 138.

<sup>3</sup> Dr. R. Fick, Die Sociale Gliederung, etc., transl. by Dr. S. K. Maitra.

<sup>4</sup> Prof. E. W. Hopkins, Religions of India, p. 188 and fn.

<sup>5</sup> Dīgh. Nik., II, pp. 316ff.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid., I, pp. 127ff.

g

t

if

in to

W

al

w ar

ui

m

or or

pr

ev

R

in

In

SO

doc

1 22

 $\mathbf{B}$ u

fiel

his car

order in which they are arranged : sacrifice in which living creatures are slaughtered; better than this is the one performed with only ghee, oil, butter, honey and sugar; better still than this is charity, specially that extended to holy men; better than this again is the building of monasteries; and better than this is the observance of moral precepts; and the best of all is the 'sacrifice' of the four-fold meditation1. In short, Buddha condemns the sacrifices in a general way by referring to them as but a 'low art' unworthy of whatever a brāhmaņa should be according to his conception<sup>2</sup>. For the first time in the religious history of India appeared a dominating personality who, with his infinite sympathy for every living being from man to the lowliest crawling insect, felt intensely for the horrors that the brahmanic sacrificial system kept daily in store for thousands of dumb victims who, though unable to resist effectively, or express their pain in an intelli-

I Dr. Barua, Pre-Buddhistic Indian Philosophy, p. 193 fn.

<sup>2</sup> Dīgh. Nik., Brahmajāla Sutta, transl. by Dr. Rhys Davids in the Dialogues of Buddha, Part I, pp. 17, 25; cf. Sutta Nipāta (S. B. E.), pp. 48-50, Majih. Nik., I, p. 82 where Buddha expatiated on the inefficacy of sacrifice (yañña).

Fig. Prodd by Green Colon Chennal and eGangotri Sec. Prodd by Glechen Congression of the Colon C

gible language, were as sentient as men and felt the pain as much as the slayers would have done if treated similarly; and for the first time in Indian history did a single individual venture to speak emphatically against all that was dear to the leaders of the then brahmanic society with their numerous resources to help them and with the combined belief of almost the whole population of India to support them; and for the first time also did an Indian undertake to support his view by practically remoulding the existing social elements into an organization that could successfully stamp out or keep in abeyance the opposed ideas and practices in India for several centuries, and are even now materialising the wishes of the great Reformer to a great extent in a few localities in India and in a few countries outside India.

It was this doctrine of ahimsā that appealed so much to the hearts of the people and extorted even from the brāhmaṇas doctrine of themselves the position of an Incarnation of the Deity for Buddha. Mahāvīra also launched upon the field of Indian thought before Buddha with his doctrine of ahimsā but his followers carried it to such an excess that it could not draw the admiration of the brahmanas while the rational view of same taken by Buddha attracted the attention of every one, no matter, whatever creed he might profess. Everybody knows that owing to the radical doctrines that fatt can Buddha preached, there was no love lost between

The Brahmanas and the Buddhists, and yet the inclusion of Buddha as an avatāra is no क्या ती दे नी doubt a clear testimony of the infinite kindnes, with which Buddha's heart was imbued,—to which even his enemies had to pay homage by including him in their pantheon.

The doctrine of ahimsā was but an offshoc of the metta feeling which embraced not merely and mettā feeling.

the negative restraint upon causing pain to any living creatures but also positive acts of charity and in de

ac St

loc int

lor

acc

10 ne d

n

as

Xé

lf

vit

as

pe

ch

lie

ga ast

dop

love, removing or attempting to remove dist tress, wherever existing and whatever form they might assume. It was this spirit that brought into being the many works of public utility such as the construction of hospitals, the the digging of wells and tanks, etc., meant to alleviate human distress or supply positive convenience and comfort where they did not exist; and the growth of this spirit having its source no doubt in a religious motive but operating independently of any religious I, pl institution religious endowment or is from the ways in departure which the acts of beneficence, were used to be performed. Standing on this catholic view-point, the outlook of the Buddhists on caste-restrictions that introduced differences in degrees of high and low where in reality they did not exist and were accompanied in many instances with narrowless and hatred obstructing the exercise of nettābhāva, could not but be as it was enunciatd by Buddha. Of this I would speak later n; suffice it to say for the present that Buddha as on many occasions asked his disciples to xercise the metta feeling as one of the methods f attaining perfection in samādhi and along vith it the kindred feelings of karunā (compassion), muditā (sympathy in others' joy), and pekkhā (equanimity).1

Buddha has never laid out a complete cheme of social organization by which he wanted to remove the reprehensible features that he observed in the brāhmaṇic society of the time. He confined himself strictly to religious opics in his disquisitions and discussions, and le

18 er,

ly

at en

ret

no

esa

-td

by

OC

ely

ing

but

and

disi

rm

hat

blid

the ant

ive

not ing ive

ous

I Dīgh. Nik., III, pp. 49, 50, 223, 224; Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 283, 284, 359ff.

it was in reply to questions put by others that he at times gave his views against the caste-restrictions of the brahmanic society and the preferential treatment and other oddities that an application of pure reason, upon which he took his stand in this respect, could not but condemn. The brahmanic standpoint had its basis in birth and in the cosmology by which four castes were given the order of preceder tion of the limbs of the great Purusa supposed have existed at the time of the creation of Universe<sup>1</sup>. Buddha on the other hand tool rational view of the subject and wanted the in viduals to be higher and lower according to the respective qualities and not according to accident of birth2; and instead of the cosmological looked upon by him as erroneous, he point to a cosmology of his own described in Aggañña Suttanta<sup>3</sup> and representing accordi to him the real state of things. In it mentions in a descending scale beings beg

See Rg Veda, Purusa-sūkta.

ning and infe clas mei the the whi me dise ed hin on to a in x bir uls by

> th ing · WE

> > ca

B

rea

na

&quot;The thought that a brahmana does not occup special place by reason of his birth but that virtue all constitutes a true brāhmaṇa occurs also in the Jātak -Dr. R. Fick, Sociale Gliederung, etc., transl., p. 20

Digh. Nik., III, pp. 8off.

t

ning from the gods with their higher qualities and ending with men who possessed much inferior qualities, and among the latter were classes formed according to vocations; and the members of these classes could easily transfer themselves from one to another by developing the qualities for the avocations of the class to which they transferred themselves. In connection with his replies to questions and the me discussions to which they led Buddha has given ed hints showing that the ksatriyas could be superior n to the brahmanas, if by qualities the former were a in reality superior to the latter; for the element of s birth which was set out as the criterion of status by the brahmanas was in fact a thing which reason cannot support. It could not be denied that there were brahmanas who though claiming to be the highest in social status by their birth were inferior to many a member of the lowest caste by their habits and inferior qualities, and Buddha pointed this out as a very unreasonable disposition of social elements to put those higher who by nature were lower. Any strong comdemnation of this state of things cannot be expected from the Incarnation of metta feeling, for that might smack of ill-will and hatred but the passages bearing on this subject are numerous and show in the characteristic but mild and rational method of Buddha what he looked upor as a reasonable arrangement that should prevai among the laymen as opposed to the monks As regards monastic life, there could never b any distinction excepting that brought about b stages of moral and spiritual progress o the path towards arhathood. As the river says he, lose, each its individual distinction Vie after falling into the ocean, so the monks long ag all their distinctions as regards social stat bithe after joining the monastic order. 1 It should by and observed that Buddha's attitude in regard trethe castes is an expression of the feeling of brotheth hood that he wanted to prevail among in mi sentient beings, and when we look at the mathwest from this standpoint, we see that this attitude de was but a logical extension of his view Ran relations among human beings.

I Dīgh. Nik., I, Ambattha Sutta; Majjh. Nik., II, Assalūyana Sutta, pp. 147ff.; Madhura Sutta, pp. 83ff.; Ang. Nik., I, p. 162.

12

It was thus that Buddha held views sulf versive of the sacrifices and the caste-system,the two main bases of the then existing brāhmanism. With such views of the two bas

Vinaya Pitaka, Vol. II, p. 239.

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

of wi au sa

in wl ed

of sa

Ba "A

est

lov

of brāhmaṇism, he could not naturally keep terms with the brāhmaṇas in the acceptance of the authority of the Vedas, as such acceptance necessarily meant compliance with their injunctions in regard to the sacrifices and the caste-system which he condemned. From this logically followed his attitude towards the Vedas, the authority of which he denied point-blank.

In the Sīlavīmaṃsa jātaka¹ the Bodhisatta says, "Of no value are the Vedas, of no value

Views
loin against the authority of tat bi the Vedas ld kb, and the worship of d trethe deities.

hai

the gyo?

and

por

evai

nk

er b

it b

0

theth

SU

m,- stin

oas

ver

is birth or kinsman for the future world; only one's own pure virtue brings him happiness in the next world." Buddha disbelieves the revealed character of the Vedas by remarking that the ancient sages Atthaka, Vāmaka, Vāmadeva, Vessāmitta, etc., never saw Brahman from whom they att watte to have received the Vedic texts<sup>2</sup>. The turn denial of the revealed character of the Vedas and with it their authority led to his view of the gods as but beings reaching their divine nature in the course of evolution from huma beings by dint of their virtue pursued by the strenuously. Worship of such divine being was of no avail, for they were unable to rais men to a higher status by dint of their or powers; for it was man's own virtue th the could elevate him morally and spiritually, a not any external help from the gods. Of the import is the following passage from the Bro majāla Suttanta: "Worship of Sun, worsh car of the Great One, invocation of Sīri the godde Vier of luck, the vowing of gifts to a god for that a grant of benefit, the offering of sacrifices bihef the gods are low arts from which Gotama binb recluse holds him aloof."1 The attack of trehe Mīmāmsakas upon the Buddhists on the grouth r that the latter themselves looked upon thin, ie texts as revealed proceeds upon the imputative ts of an idea to the original Buddhists they diagof not entertain2.

I Jātakas, III, 194ff.

<sup>2</sup> Dīgh. Nik., I, Tevijja Suttanta, p. 239; cf. Dr. Barua's Pre-Buddhistic Indian Philosophy, pp. 193, 243— "All the thinkers in the neo-vedic period agreed in estimating the four Vedas and Vedic sciences as the lower knowledge."

Buddha discouraged the magical practic ap and the rites of the Atharva Veda, and eve

the

Vie aga mag pra

> as etc bel

Brwh lyi

> by fic

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Dr. Rhys Davids, Dialogues of the Buddh I, p. 24.

<sup>2</sup> Max Müller, Ancient Sanskrit Literature, Pl 43, 44.

Views against the magical

practices.

Vin:

mal

hen

eing

rais

70

th

a eve

eddli

2, PI

the practice of other arts not excluding astrology, by which men were led to commit deviations from the right conduct. It is needless to say that many of these practices were of a puerile character such as performing rites for averting the supposed consequences of evil omens such as the sitting of a hawk on the roof of a house, the etc. The magical rites are performed in the 3rd belief that the things desired by an individual rsh can be procured by virtue of those rites as dde Veertainly as a particular effect follows a particular r and moreover, the belief in the efficacy es bihef these rites inspires one with the idea that a pin bnormal powers can be acquired through them, f trene that right conduct which is believed to be couth roductive of happiness or spiritual good might thin, e discarded, and magical rites made to take catiwats place. This idea is detrimental to the pursuit of virtue and this was perhaps one of the reasons Brwhy Buddha did not countenance these rites, apart from the question of superstitions underlying them.1

It is clear from the dissatisfaction expressed by Buddha at the fruitlessness of his own mortifications during his spiritual discipleship under Dīgh. Nik., Brahmajāla and Kevaddha Suttantas.

16

several preceptors in the first six years after his Views against mortifications and other ascetic practices.

renunciation of the world that lost his belief in the mortification means to salvation.1 enlightenment was preceded the pursuit of the middle path; which the use of the necessar of life as to food and raiment was not regard as an obstacle in the attainment of spirit Just as on the one hand the use these necessaries must be combined with morrelig conduct and meditation, so on the other, will uffiascetic practices, if adopted in a moderate deginanora must be associated with the same two essent bit ody of spiritual life. Sanction was given by Bud by a to a moderate use of ascetic practices atractices atractices concession2 to the strong tendency of the Indith ne mind, imbued as it had been for a long tin ist with the belief in the efficacy of such penant with the to resort to the extreme forms of abstine cat and from comforts of life or even painful methods Bhaso positively inflicting pain upon the body as a lip a to the acquisition of spiritual merit in the dire yiah tion of the mind towards the spiritual ide

Bude extre to b of tl look in th tially dilate (sīla) subje

> no ficous

nd t lutie

Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 77ff., 242-246.

Dr. Rhys Davids, Dialogues of the Buddha, p. 219.

INTERNAL FORCES

17

Buddha himself declared the hollowness of such extreme practices but left the moderate ones to be intertwined into the programme of life of the Buddhist monks who must in all cases look upon the observance of the moral precepts in the practice of meditation as forming essentially the basis of his religion. I need not dilate on what constituted the right conduct t (sīla) according to Buddha, for it forms the subject-matter of a large section of Buddhist religious literature which is widely known. Juffice it to say that Buddha insisted on the in anoral purity in the use of speech, mind and f billody for all those who joined the Buddhist order, by and through which the salvation lies. rescribes certain rules for observance in ist in their ways of life though conforming the prescribed rules. The many cat and in the monastic order which for this Bhason engaged principally his attention. This are a dip a great departure from the doctrines of the re viāhmanas whose śāstras declare that salvation, not the monopoly of monastic or ascetic life byat is equally within the reach of students or ficouseholders provided they desire it keenly in nd through the performance of their respective luties. As to the mode of meditation adopted by Buddha, it is evident from the Buddhis works or extracts on meditation such as the Mahāsatipaṭṭhāna Suttanta, the Paṭisaṃbhida magga, the Visuddhimagga, etc., that it was kept free from the practices belonging to hather yoga as also from the several forms of asan or prānāyāma. For instance, in the Majjhim Nikāya,1 Buddha inculcates the avoidance of mechanical process by which the tongue is push backwards towards the palate, a device that sudev often resorted to in the Hindu system of the control of the contro Buddha has in short desired to keep his y wrat mārga free from anything that is fanciful, swise or unnecessary to the concentration of the me Buc Moreover, the abnormal devices tend to credit tand pride in the minds of the sādhakas and imea the uninstructed spectators, if any, with addir rele

Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 242-244.

Buddha's attitude towards the brāhmanic as practices is set forth in many places in the Nika, The of which is, for instance,—"An ascetic who has ad the mode of taking food in the manner of a dog and (kukkuravatika or govatika) takes rebirth on acco his penance in this life either as a dog or a cow he longs to be reborn in the world of gods as a rest his penances in this life, he is doomed to perditid the wrong view he holds." Majjh. Nik., I, p. 239 pp. 387, 388.

tion for med elen with clea ces

+ .10

100

and

such tion Suci

they

mult Min f Diet . tion which might tempt the former to utilize it the for worldly purposes. The Buddhist path of ida meditation is thus a simplified process in which the Wai elements of the brahmanic yoga exist sometimes iths. with slight modifications but which has been kept san clear of what was looked upon as either unnehim cestary, extraneous, or dangerous. It is suited ft t. hoever joins the monastic order, provided the exercise of the sīlas, he had succeeded in ash sudeveloping frames of body and mind in which he could launch himself on an attempt at concenparation of mind leading to the ultimate wisdom. "The states (samāpatti) in Buddhist system of meditation were of importance, not merely of importance for learners as a means for arriving at Nirvana, but the temporal release they afforded from the sense-percepts and the concrete was so highly esteemed, that they were looked upon as luxuries and enjoyed as such by the saints and by the Buddha himself."2 The ultimate object with which these meditations and forms af discipline were undertaken and towards which Buddha rose to lead the people in his easy but certain way was Nirvana.

Jult o

hin f E. g. Digh. Nik., III, pp. 42ff.

Prof. Warren's Buddhism in Translations, pp. 4, 283.

20

The signification of Nirvāna has assument, is various complexions at the hands of interpreter attended to the significant of th

The signification of Nirvāṇa.

same meant for an individual dispression of karma and re-birth with the dum attendant miseries. It is futile to away for us to try to define what is meant by thand term; the Vedantists might identify it weas union with the Brahman the indescribable sub the tratum of the phenomenal universe, the votarioble of any of the highest deities such as Smeelie Visnu might call it mukti, or the Christians with think it to be nothing but salvation as cone be by them; but the fact remains that (Budd Bud himself absolutely silent as to what he wit pr the term to really mean. (This attitud Buddha is perhaps significant from one poinout view, namely, his general unwillingness to che into ultimate questions of metaphysics; forest definition or a description of Nirvana whee certainly have led to the mention of things wion would have proved a good ground for fruit nd discussions among his followers as well as amieo the Buddhists and non-Buddhists. To the who are far away from the state in w Nirvāņa is attained, the thing might be a sub of differences of opinion, but to those who attai it, it was as clear as a perception, though the oreters attendant conceptions and feelings may lie beyond the power of language to express. Indeed, dual disputes as to ontological questions often prove hirly to be no better than quarrels over tweedleh the dum and tweedledee. Buddha was perfectly tile haware of the worthlessness of such discussions by thand their evil consequences, and has for that it wireason been uniformly silent over questions which de substherwise might have given rise to undesirvotariable results. 1 Suffice it to say that Buddhism Sweelies ultimately upon success in this yoga s without which the life of a Buddhist cannot on be complete. This is the fruition to which dd Buddhism leads and for the attainment of which wit proposes to show the shortest way.

It will thus be seen that Buddhism struck point a path, of which easiness and simplicity were the characteristic features. These two features freezended upon the fact that the undue wheortance attached by the Hindus to rites s with practices that were difficult to undertake ruited.

amieo Cf. Sutta Nipāta (S. B. E.), pp. 167-174,—"The tilt o rent schools of philosophy contradict each other, proclaim different truths, but the truth is only one. ong as the disputations are going on, so long will be strife in the world."

on account of their elaborateness or expersumedit, ys by and the arduousness involved in them, was ablarters attere of in Buddhism. There were other reasons for which Buddhism could attract the people disprended far as its tenets and practices were concerned their their

(1) The avoidance of metaphysical questifile for wenistal rendered it easily intelligible to the masses.

by thind, metaphysical questifile for wenistal by thind, metaphysical questifile for wenistal by thind, metaphysical questification and the second process of the second process of

(2) The greater play of reason instead it with eastmonth belief that in the brāhmaṇic system is so pereble substitute the through demanded by the sacred texts and in votariable he puide a range of matters was an attractive feat to the people, who developed more than other than of the habit of reasoning for themselves the and bad side of the religious questions.

udd ha isde b (3) The doctrine of ahimsā and mettā fe wantedin t advocating the exercise of mercy to all creatitude the and the brotherhood of all human beings ap point of vis ed very much to the hearts of all men, specto a linter i to those who were not staunch believers in; for s sacrifices but by independent reasoning log withedh upon the killing of hundreds of animal vicings willion an fruitindiul sacrifices extremely cruel; as also to those who though Hindus were feas am leo re the exclusiveness of the brahmanas in the tro the coru in will fi 5) ment meted out to them.

(4) Buddhism did not rely so much a sub appeals to the supernatural as brāhmanism attai attai

म्र ब्रुश हल्या हलका

t, ys by the utterance of mantras, the performthatten of sacrifices, and in fact, compliance with beys many rituals prescribed in the sastras. disprence to this unseen and supernatural element prāhmanism became so much exaggerated that neitlun error in the smallest detail of a ritual, or for wenistake in the utterance of a single syllable thinda mantra had to be expiated by proper witheas monies or rectified by going through the substhes things again, and the belief of the clients tarigble he priests appears to have approved of such va clieands upon their credence. There are many mighter directions in which exaggerated demands ceived a the belief of the laity in general were d ha isde by the brāhmanas. But Buddhism was valuated n to a very great extent of such utilizations on the supernatural element that often mystified oil of vision of the laity in regard to having a e unter idea of what the religion was and what for were actually doing. This withedhism a practical turn making it include wition and ceremonies with their accompanying uit indiulas that the masses could understand and am eo reason of which was generally patent to t) or understanding.

The language in which it was preached with the people concerned and therefore their reason could obtain greater scope for exercise in the intelligent following of the disco of or the rituals to which they attended, wals expensively used by the brāhmaṇas in connect with all religious matters could not satisfy the in these respects.

tai

24

(6) The great stress laid by Buddhism u it right conduct, so much so that it became it of its most prominent features, was effectively attractive factor. Buddhism is otha described as an ethical religion on the grady of the prominence of this feature as aga its several others that are emphasized in ch r systems of religion. From the very time val a convert enters into the monastic order it to the time when he attains to arhathood, ific keynote of his life is right conduct. C narily the unsophisticated conscience of an untutored man approves very greatly intrinsic rightness of a scheme of conduct intrinsic rightness of a scheme of conduct proposes to deal out goodwill and charity to and demands strict continence, and silent fork in ance that sees an error in an act where of would have seen offence and ill-will. Upon this of man that has its root in his inborn conscients rests the strength of the tables of the of conduct for general guidance like the the commandments of the Bible and it was to exerent in man's mental constitution that this disco of Buddhism appealed so much, and ed, wals even now.

INTERNAL FORCES

onnec The prevalence of the practice of yoga sisfy thecome widely spread for a long time ous to the advent of Buddha and carried nism u it the general belief among the Hindus came it was one of the most potent instruments was effecting the highest spiritual progress. is cha was also an advocate of yoga and, as ne gredy stated, laid the greatest stress on it s aga its preliminaries, right conduct, etc., in ch might be regarded as making an inditime val fit for the exercises of mind and body order it involved, while he discouraged the hood, ifications which he regarded as useless. ct. C rendered simpler and more popular, of of to this method of spiritual culture he ceatly zation of impermanence of the world, the rity to nee of soul as an indestructible and rity to anent entity, and the existence of suffering nt fortal worldly affairs, led to a habitual ice of the astāngika mārga and the attainnthis of bliss by the dispersal of ignorance conscipy  $\bar{q}$  the root-cause of misery.

the from the facts stated above it will be manifeld that the way of life that Buddha looked upon as the path to Nirvana was a good d similar to the life of the vanaprasthas and retrateal The wanderings of the yatis combined the comparatively stationary life of the qual with prasthas with an absolute non-attachmen ir vanathe worldly matters were engrafted in tit to monkish organization with right conduct leto a simplified yoga as their methods of sad? the radical difference lying in the fact viana, while the vanaprasthas and the yatis recog sigthat the authority of the Vedas and the fitagized performed simplified forms of sacrifices vormer and rituals, the Buddhist monks cut off absom their connection with the Vedas the autcellutely haority of which they discarded outright.

4

as to

th ie.

II

The External Forces in the Spread of Buddhism

We are now in a position to enumerate the external causes and circumstances that helped the wide-spread propagation of Buddhism during the period from the first preachings of Buddhism by its Founder to the reign of the emperor Asoka when the religion spread over a very large portion of the continent of India and even over parts of countries lying outside India.

The commanding personality of Buddha, his self-sacrifice, the strength of his character, his

i. spiritual attainments, his supersensual vision, and the occasional manifestations of miraculous powers served in a great degree to convince the people of his spiritual greatness and made them attach importance to his words. Prof. Keith attributes the vast success of Buddhism not so much to the merits of the religion as to the personality of the founder.

See, for instance, Vinaya, I, pp. 16, 25ff.

He says that "the founder of Buddhism must rank as one of the most commanding personalities ever produced by the eastern world".

The character and personality of Buddha's immediate disciples such as Sāriputta, Mogga-ii.

Character and personality of Buddha's immediate disciples.

lāna, Mahākassapa, Mahākaccāyana, Puṇṇa Mantāniputta, Ānanda were also a powerful factor in the propagation of Buddhism. Their excellences are mentioned sometimes by Buddha himself and sometimes by their brother monks. Sāriputta is described as excelling all in wisdom, self-control, and virtue, well-composed in his inner self, dwelling on the highest planes of thought, expert in the knowledge of the doctrines and possessing capacity for preaching persuasively<sup>2</sup>. Moggalāna was valiant, self-controlled and possessed of supernormal powers and able to raise the disciples to the highest stages of moral and spiritual progress<sup>3</sup>; Mahākassapa was foremost in the ascetic ways which Buddha permitted as a concession to the tendencies of the age, self-sacrificing, and loving to dwell remote from men; Mahākaccāyana was a great expositor of dhamma1; Punna Mantāniputta was an appealing preacher; and Ānanda was the foremost bhikkhu in erudition. morally watchful, steadfast, versed in the sacred lore, and eloquent2. The qualities mentioned are no doubt but hints that they were present in more than ordinary degree in the character of the monks, though it should not be supposed that the requisite qualities required for a monk but not mentioned above were absent in them. monks were all at one in their zeal for the propagation of the religion, in the strength of which they had unswerving belief, and to the founder of which they all bore the highest reverence. This was the bond that combined them and their followers into a closely compact body to march on in the path of duty prescribed by Buddha and to materialize his wishes by propagating his The earnestness with which the doctrines. first generation of Buddha's disciples performed their duties can be best described by comparing it to the zeal with which the Christian apostles did their share of work by practising and spreading the doctrines promulgated by Christ.

<sup>1</sup> Prof. A. B. Keith's Buddhist Philosophy, p. 147.

<sup>2</sup> Mrs. Rhys Davids, Psalms of the Brethren, pp.69, 388, 402 & 390 f. n.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., p. 390 f. n.

I Mrs. Rhys Davids, op. cit., pp. 386, 387.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., pp. 352, 353.

30

The Buddhist leaders in the generation following the immediate disciples of Buddha up

iii.
Personality of the subsequent Buddhist leaders up to the reign of Asoka.

to the reign of Asoka included likewise prominent characters who might well take their place by the side of his immediate disciples. The names of monks who took a prominent part in the deliberations of the church organization and maintained discipline, moral or otherwise, are many, but the biographical details of only a few of them are found in the Buddhist literature. Among these few may be mentioned Siggava whose preseverance in the cause of the conversion of non-Buddhists to Buddhism is found in the description where he is said to have daily visited, with ultimate success, the house of a brahmana for so long as seven years to pursuade his with teachings and arguments to embrace the religion1; Sambhūta Sānavāsika whose zeal in the work of conversion carried him so far as Kashmir and Kandahar to preach and secure converts in those places2; Revata vastly learned and free from asavas (moral impurities); Yasa extremely energetic in the work of consolidating the Buddhist doctrines for which the second council was convened, and also in eliminating the evils that the Vajjians were trying to introduce into the church organization by modifying its rules1; Udena who was able to convert Ghotamukha brāhmaņa after the death of Buddha and have an upațțhānasālā built at Pātaliputta by him2; Upagupta of the time of Asoka who was highly intelligent and eloquent and was a pillar of strength to the Buddhist church. It was the charm of his character and personality that made Asoka accept him as his spiritual preceptor and help the Buddhist organization by building monasteries and stūpas in numberless places and give donations for the maintenance of the monks and the spread of Buddhism. Materials are yet lacking for drawing up a list of energetic and religious workers like those already mentioned showing the period in which they worked, the prominent qualities by which they were distinguished, and the share of burden borne by them in regard to preaching and conversion. Such a list is sure to be very useful in giving a picture of the personnel upon whom rested the arduous task of extending the limits of conversion, and in drawing a sketch of the gradual spread of Buddhism.

I 'Mahāvaṃsa, ch. v.

<sup>2</sup> Edkins' Chinese Buddhism, p. 67.

I Mahāvamsa, ch. iv.

<sup>2</sup> Majjh. Nik., II, p. 163.

It is supposed that Buddhism while in its full bloom lacked an organization possessing

iv.
Internal strength of the organization.

a central power that could coordinate and bring into a line the local units scattered throughout the length and breadth of the region over which Bnddhism had spread. This supposition, I think, is not supported by full reasons and evidences because the very fact of the rapid and extensive spread of Buddhism as well as the maintenance of its hold upon the country for such a long time gives the lie direct to such an inference. Though there was no central authority of the kind that we generally find in the organization with which we meet ordinarily, the central authority in the Buddhist organization was derived from a source of a different sort. It did not comprise praticular men, composing a central body, whose dictates were predominant and who could check and control the smaller bodies in the various parts of the country, but it was the invisible body of rules, prescribed by Buddha and very minute in their injuctions, that regulated the smallest details of monastic life and commanded the common respect and obedience from all the monks whatever might be the position occupied by them in the organization or in whichever locality they might be stationed1. The one or two instances of difference of opinion or quarrel or disobedience that are found in the Buddhist works are generally interpreted as signs of the weakness of the organization lacking a central authority, but when we remember that the central authority as pointed out above was of a different kind and was obeyed with great respect by all the monks on account of their living faith in the words of Buddha, we are led to look upon that interpretation as wrong. Observers of the development of the Buddhist religion might fall easily into the error of thinking that the defect which afterwards grew into a source of weakness lay in the constitution which was left without a governing body. But it should be remembered that the founder of the Buddhist religion ought to be credited with the knowledge claimed

I Dīgh. Nik., II, p. 154. Yo vo Ānanda mayā Dhammo ca Vinayo ca desito paññatto so vo mama accayena saṭṭhā; Majjh. Nik., III, p. 10. Ānanda explains to Gopaka Moggalāna about the headship of the church: "Na kho mayam, brāhmaṇa, appaṭisaraṇā; sappaṭisaraṇā mayam, brāhmaṇa, dhammapaṭisaraṇā'ti vadesi".

as a matter of course by the present day writers of the story of the development of Buddhism. The fallacy that is often committed by writers in tracing the causes of the decline of a social or religious institution or organism lies in the fact that they find fault with a particular limb of the organization or a particular practice which was really a source of strength when the institution or the organism was in its healthy state. If in old age a finger of a man is attacked by gangrene, are we justified in laying the blame and in finding fault with the existence of the very finger itself and tracing the cause of the decline to the possession of that limb by the man when he was young and healthy. Similarly, to say that the cause of the decline of Buddhism is to be found in the want of check upon the local sanghas while the whole Buddhist organization with the mutual co-operation of the local sanghas was able to keep Buddhism in a flourishing state for so many centuries is to take as a cause of decline a thing which was a cause of its prosperity or at its worst but a neutral something upon which the real cause operated its ruin. In the question before us, the invisible but yet forceful authority to which I have referred was existent though it was intangible, and it was the gradual deterioration of the living faiths of the monks and the introduction of elements that chilled the warmth of their faiths that are really responsible for bringing about weakness in that very organization which in the heydey of the prosperity of Buddhism worked so well, strengthened by the devoted attachment of the believing monks to the invisible central authority Buddha's words constituting the life the whole organization. What I want to point out is that the strength of the Buddhist religion with its organizations lay in the living faith and devotion of its followers and not so much in the structure through which the faith and devotion were ordained by Buddha to be given a material shape. Buddha gave his best consideration to the details of the structure of the organization and even changed them or added to their number as soon as the suggestion made by his followers met with his approval. No mundane organization can be perfect and it is enough if the common neccessities pertaining to the object for which it is founded are provided Buddha went much further than this and prescribed a Vinaya which was meant to meet even the probable or minute exigencies of monastic life; and to find fault with this organization while the real defect lies in the gradual decline of faith is to misread and misunderstand the real story of the Buddhist religion. So long as the faith was warm, Buddhism was alive; and as soon as it began to cool, the pulsation slowed down until the death of Buddhism in India synchronised with the full disappearance of the warmth of faith.

One of the reasons why Buddhism could spread more rapidly in the Magadhan area than

v.
The unorthodoxy of the people in the area in and around Magadha.

it could perhaps have done had it been started in regions like the North-western area of Kuru-pañcāla was the fact that the people of that area were not so strictly orthodox in their adherence to the brāhmaṇic faith, and the doctrines and rules, of which it was the basis. It is the inference of scholars such as Grierson, Oldenberg, that the Aryans entered into India in two groups, the later being separated from the earlier by a pretty long distance of time. The group represented by the Kuru tribe settled in the mid-land comprising the country near the modern Delhi and its immediate north, while the other group settled in the outland encircling the mid-land on the east, south and west. Brāhmanic orthodoxy had its home in the mid-land while the outland represented unortho-doxy roughly in proportion to the distance from the said centre of or odoxy, because distance hindered the process of keeping on the same level the orthodoxy of the people of the remote districts; while it is also recognised that between the two groups of the Aryans, there were differences of ideas, manners, customs and even perhaps of language. The diluted orthodoxy of the people of the eastern outland favoured the growth of systems of thought that did not care to be in correspondence with those prevailing in the Kuru-pancala country. The eastern mid-land comprised the Magadhan area as one of its components and the favourable circumstances offered by it for the growth of heterodox ideas were one of the causes why Buddha's preachings could be received by the people more rapidly than they could have been done, had they taken place in the stronghold of brahmanism in the mid-land1. Moreover, there are evidences in the Piţakas that the organization of the brahmanical orders in Magadha and Videha was not so strong and well-knit as to resist effectively the progress of Buddhism. The members belonging to the community were not also so strong in dialectics as to defeat in argument Buddha or the more eminent of the Buddhist monks and several cases are recorded of debates between the brahmanas and Buddhists in which the former could not defeat the latter by showing the hollowness of the logic underlying the arguments. The brāhmaņas of this part of the country are found in the Buddhist works to be tracing their descent from brāhmanas of the northern portions of India (udīcca) which shows that the source of nobility and brahmanic purity was looked upon as existing there and not in the region where Buddhism flourished at first1. The well-known reference of the Satapatha Brāhmana states the river Sadānīrā as the limit beyond which lay areas of land which were made fit for habitation for brahmanas only in so far as the sacrificial fire was lit up by them for the performance of sacrifices. This sacrificial fire had stopped on the Sadānīrā in its migration towards the east which pointed to that river as the boundary of the area that had some time before been considered as the sacred land. It therefore stands out that the tract

I See Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics, II, p. 540 and Oldenberg's Buddha, appendix I.

38

<sup>1</sup> Dr. R. Fick, Sociale Gliederung etc., transl., pp. 34, 40. 213,

EXTERNAL FORCES

of country east of the river was inferior to lands in the west from the view-point of brahmanic orthodoxy. One more noticeable feature is the predominance of the ksattriyas in the eastern lands by virtue of wealth and acquisition of learning which made them powerful enough to carry on reactionary movements as against the existing conditions of things as settled or desired by

Predominance of the ksattriyas in the prācya-deśa.

It is very difficult to say the brāhmanas. how far the kṣattriya origin of Sākya Simha brought strength to his religious propaganda by virtue of this mere affinity of origin between him and the ksattriyas of the place. To assert that this element was altogether absent in the forces which made them cluster under his religious flag would be perhaps going But it should always be borne in too far. in mind that the innate strength and attraction of Buddha's personality and the doctrines preached by him were so great as to put into shade the force of this element, specially when entrance into the Buddhist order meant a cleavage between the family origin and the new life that was brought into being.

The rapid spread of Buddhism within a few centuries after its foundation is due to the fact 40 that conversion of non-Buddhists to Buddhism was regarded as a part of the duty of the monks

vi.
Buddhism,a proselytizing religion. Why so?

at the highest stage of their spiritual development. The attainment of Nirvāṇa by a Buddhist may be the goal of a monk, but to attain it without at the same time giving others the opportunity of realizing its importance and taking to the right course for reaching it has about it a taint of selfishness however slight. The means by which the highest can be known and tasted ought not to be the secret of the select few or of an individual. It should be given a wide publicity in order that all men from the highest to the meanest may have the opportunity of exercising his judgment and take to the way that leads to the highest goal of manhood. The miseries of this world are countless, and they weigh down the hearts of men constantly with their heavy weights. If the truths found by Buddha, the means discovered by him can lessen them even temporarily it is certainly a blessing; and the truths in fact profess to bring within reach of mortals permanent blessings. Those who have realized this truth in their lives cannot sit idle and look upon their fellow human beings with unconcern while the remedy is within their reach. It was this feeling of love and compassion that animated Buddha and the Buddhists to preach broadcast the truths of their religion in order that the groping humanity may know that there are saving truths which can be attained by particular ways of regulating life and thought. It was from this point of view of looking at proselytizing that the Buddhists drew their stimulus for activities in this direction, and we find the Hīnayānists and, in a greater measure, the Mahāyānists exercising their best energies for the propagation of their faith for the diffusion of general well-being and the alleviation of miseries incidental to human existence. The sacred books of the Buddhists from the Nikāyas downwards contain passages extolling the merits of preaching and conversion. The verse of the Dhammapada (354) "dhammadānam sabbadānam jināti" testifies to the high estec in which the duty of conversion was held by the Hīnayānists. The scriptures of the Mahāyānists look at the propagation of the faith in the same light. In the Saundarānanda Kāvya, Nanda's duty is not finished by the attainment of his own nirvana. He wanders about with the object of bringing salvation to the distressed beings. The same work describes Buddha as making the remark that all beings are under delusion, and it is Nanda's supreme duty to preach to them the dhamma, for he will be a lesson to those who are steeped in worldly passions1. The Siksāsamuccaya quotes passages from the Prajñāpāramitā, Saddharmapundarīka, Candrapradīpa-Sūtra, and Sāgaramati Sūtra on the merit of preaching and doing it with discrimination2.

EXTERNAL FORCES

Conversion by the evangelical method marks out Buddhism as making a radical departure from the traditionary lines on which the Indian religions brought new adherents into their fold. The ways in which Hinduism extended the boundaries of its domain are peculiar to itself. Its methods of enlisting new recruits are in consonance with the caste-system, its spirit of exclusiveness specially in religious matters and its power of slowly adapting itself to the changes effected by forces from within or without.

Missionary work, a departure from the traditional ways for the spread of religion.

process followed by it consisted in absorbing the new recruits into the Hindu society by attracting them slowly and imperceptibly to adopt Saundarānanda Kāvya, sarga 18, siks. 54-58.

Śikṣāsamuccaya (Bendall's translation), pp. 310, 31I.

EXTERNAL FORCES

more or less the social customs and practices of the Hindus and thus occupy a place within an existing caste or sub-caste, or form a new subcaste, as the case may be. The alteration of the religious views is left to follow the social absorption that gradually sets in. The early Jainas, discarding as they did the caste-system, were in a position to follow a course different from the traditional method of the Hindus, but the Buddhists struck out a radically different path. The conversion of a new adherent was done deliberately, and his embrace of the new faith was effected in a way that could be well marked as a change that was being made with a deliberate object. With the Buddhists these features were more prominent; but among the Hindus, the chang was slow and imperceptible. It was no doubt the zeal of the founders of religions and their best disciples to share with others the blessings of the state they attained and the truths they realized that impelled them to take to missionary activities. The radical departure made by the Buddhists from the traditional method was responsible for the rapid way in which Buddhism spread not only in India but also in the countries outside. The very first resolution made by Buddha after the attainment of the summum bonum was to become a religious preacher and save mankind from worldly cares and miseries.

Buddha's zeal in preaching.

He went to Sārnāth to convert the five brāhmaṇas, after whom he made many more converts. He formed them into a band of missionaries, of whom he was the leader. In the Vinaya<sup>1</sup> we find Buddha speaking thus to his followers who then numbered only sixty one: "Go, ye now, O Bhikkhus, and wander, for the gain of the many, for the welfare of the many, out of compassion for the world. Let not two of you go the same way. Preach the doctrine which is glorious in the beginning, middle, and end, in the spirit and in the letter; proclaim a consummate, perfect, and pure life of holiness.

Buddha exhorts his disciples to propagate the doctrine.

There are beings whose mental eyes are covered by scarcely any dust, but if the doctrine is not preached to them, they cannot attain salvation. They will understand the doctrine. And I will go also, O Bhikkhus, to Uruvela-senānigāma in order to preach the doctrine". Buddha passed from one country to another preaching dhamma

I Mahāvagga, I, pp. 20, II (translated in the S. B. E., Vol. XIII, pp. 112, 113; Sam. Nik., I, pp. 105-6; Buddhist Literature, p. 43.

which is heard by house-holders or their sons who being convinced of its excellence retired from the world leaving their possessions great or small<sup>1</sup>. This example was followed ardently by many of his disciples. Sāriputta was considered

Propagation of Buddhism by Buddha's disciples. the fittest person after him to roll the wheel of Law<sup>2</sup>; Moggaliputta, to preach the religion to the denizens of hell, gods and spirits of heaven; Puṇṇa Mantāniputta, to carry on the work among the rough people of Sunā-parantaka<sup>3</sup>; Piṇḍola-Bharadvāja, the chief of the sīhanādikānam (lion-roarers), to remove doubts regarding Buddhistic path or fruit<sup>4</sup>. This shows how the disciples fulfilled their Master's desire. The Master was satisfied with their activities as indicated by his departure from the mortal world, which, as said by him to Māra, was conditional on his seeing that his disciples had been sufficiently large in number and able to refute the doctrines of their adversaries, and that his religion well and widely

I Majjh. Nik., I, p. 179. This is one of the many passages which constantly recur in the Nikāyas.

<sup>2</sup> Ang. Nik., I, 13, 7; Milindapañha, p. 362.

<sup>3</sup> Majjh. Nik., III, p. 268.

<sup>4</sup> Psalms of the Brethren, p. 111.

preached1. A passage in the Saddharmapundarīka2 is an evidence of the earnestness which animated the disciples long after Buddha's death for propagating the religion: "When the Tathagata has become wholly extinct, we, O Lord, want to go in ten directions and make all beings write, read, think over, and proclaim this dharmaparyāya by the power of the Lord". The history of Buddhist faith both in its earlier and later phases reveals the fact that the Buddhist monks gave their best energies for the propagation of the religion and thus acted up to the wishes of the founder of the religion. The despatch of missionaries to various countries both within and abroad during the reign of Asoka, the successful attempt of the Buddhist monks to colonise Central Asia during the reign of Kaniska, and the perilous journey and voyages undertaken to China, Tibet, Cambodia, Java and the Malay Archipelago by the monks in the later history of Buddhism amply show to what a great extent the Master's bidding was carried out.

The success of the methods employed by

<sup>1</sup> Digh. Nik., II, p. 106; Mr. Rockhill's Life of the Buddha, p. 34.

<sup>2</sup> Dr. Hoernle's Manuscript Remains etc., p. 155.

EXTERNAL FORCES

the Buddhists for spreading their religion depended upon the following factors:—

(a) The easiness with which the religion could be followed;

VI. Methods employed for making converts.

(b) The tolerant spirit shown to converts;

(e) The tenacity of the preachers in persuasion;

(d) Power of disputation; and

(e) Appealing way of preaching.

(a) The tenets and practices of Buddhism are simple and can be made perfectly clear to a layman without much difficulty

Graudal if only its exoteric side be put before him. Again, to those who intend to follow it, their course can be made easy by asking them to follow at first the tenets and practices that are suitable to their yet undisciplined and undeveloped powers and take to the gradually difficult ones suitable to their yet undisciplined and undeveloped powers, and take to the gradually difficult ones by stages<sup>1</sup>. To a householder, a Buddhist monk can preach at first the dānakatham, sīlakatham, saggakatham, kāmānam ādīnavam okāram samkilesam nekkhamme ānisamsam (the discourse on alms-giving, moral precepts, the heavens, the danger, corruption and impurity of desires, and the blessings of retirement) and when he perceives that his mind has been sufficiently prepared by hearing the discourses, he can preach the excellent teachings of Buddha, viz. dukkham samudayam nirodham maggam (suffering, the origin of suffering, the removal of suffering, the way to the removal of suffering)1. These discourses have an appealing force which moves the hearts of the people irrespective of their creeds. The higher and deeper truths of Buddhism were gradually imparted and explained to the initiated or rather to the sotapannas. Thus the Buddhists from the lowest grade to the highest did not feel embarrassed by the weight of doctrines practices too difficult for their yet limited understanding or their undeveloped powers of fortitude and devotion.

I For the gradual course of training in Buddhism (imasmım dhammavinaye anupubbasikkhā anupubbaki-riyā anupubbapatipadā) see Majjh. Nik., III, pp. 2-4.

8

(b) Buddhism had in it a large element of catholic spirit<sup>2</sup> which appealed to even the members of other religions. To attack another religion as a whole was never sanctioned by Buddhism. Buddha had to recruit his converts from other religions: Catholicity he never disparaged any particular of the religion. religion to which any of them might have belonged, though, of course, he showed at times that particular doctrines or practices of that religion were wrong, erroneous, or unworthy of being followed. Buddha, again, held the view that gifts should be made by the Buddhists to the deserving members of all other religious orders and not to the Buddhists alone2. He permitted a Jaina householder after his conversion to Buddhism to continue his charity to the Jaina monks winning thereby the admiration of the members of other sects3. In the Majjhima Nikāya4, he is recorded to have said that a particular Ājīvaka was reborn in heaven by virtue of his being a kammavādin (i.e. a believer in the law of Karma), indicating that the claim of a non-Buddhist to heaven was not denied by his own religion nor disparage other religions); Ang. Nik., I, p. 27.

 <sup>1</sup> Digh. Nik., I, p. 148; Vinaya, I, 7, 5-6; VI,
 36, 5; Oldenberg's Buddha (Hoey's translation), p.

<sup>2</sup> Majjh. Nik., I, p. 523-'na ca saddhamma okkasanā na paradhamma vambhanā (one should neither extol

<sup>2</sup> Ang. Nik., III, 57, I.

<sup>3</sup> Vinaya, VI, 32; Ang. Nik., IV, p. 185.

<sup>4</sup> Majjh. Nik., I, p. 483.

Buddha merely because he was not a Buddhist. He held in high respect the brāhmaṇas who led truly moral life. The spirit of toleration is no doubt a prevailing feature of the religious life of India but yet it should be said to the credit of Buddhism that it was practised by the religion in a more thorough-going manner than perhaps any other contemporary religion of India.

(c) The Buddhist scriptures do not furnish us with very many instances in which the Perseverance of the preachers.

Buddhist preachers had to be tenacious in the prosecution of their works of conversion in regard to particular individuals who were hard to be convinced; for the general trend of the instances is rather the other way, viz. the followers of other persuasions were eager to embrace Buddhism and therefore presented little difficulty to the Buddhist missionaries in their conversion. The examples in point are few and far between but yet they show clearly the zeal which animated some of the Buddhist preachers in propagating their faith. It is mentioned in the Divyāvadāna<sup>2</sup> that Pūrņa resolved

I Sutta Nipāta, Brāhmaṇa-dhammika Sutta. 2 Divyāvadāna, p. 39; Mahāvastu, I, p. 245.

EXTERNAL FORCES

to carry on his missionary work among the ruffians of Śronaparantaka even at the risk of his life. This elicited the admiration of Buddha who spoke to him in the following terms, "Pūrna, are endowed with patience (kṣāntisaurabhena) and a fit and proper person to live among the Śronaparantakas. Go Pūrna, free those who wish to be freed, rescue those to be rescued, console those to be consoled, and emancipate those to be emancipated." Milindapañha<sup>1</sup> relates the account of Rohana visiting the house of Nagasena's father continually for seven years and ten months with the object of converting Nagasena. The visits were made from a time before the birth of Nagasena in the midst of taunts and insults hurled at him. The visits inspite of the unfavourable circumstances ultimately served to conciliate the parents of Nagasena who was then converted to Buddhism. The Mahāvamsa2 has a similar account but the persons mentioned in it are different. It is difficult to state how far the narratives are based on actual incidents, but the fact that the narratives themselves did not appear as uncouth to the writers of the two aforesaid books is itself a proof that such perseverance of the Buddhist preachers in the work of conversion was not quite an unusual thing in those days.

I Milindapañha, pp. 8ff.

<sup>2</sup> Mahāvaṃsa, pp. 41-43.

(d) Many are of opinion that Buddha himself avoided entering into discussions with others, and discouraged those of his disciples who entered into discussions on religious matters in the course of their preaching and wandering. Such opinion is not wholly correct. There are passages in the Buddhist scriptures which lend colour to the aforesaid view but we have to go deeper to get at the true state of things. To cite one or two such passages: He is said to have declared that his dhamma is not to be grasped by mere logic (atakkāvacara)1 and he condemned the śramanas and brāhmanas who took to hair-splitting disputations saying, 'Issue has been joined against you, you are defeated, set to work to clear your views, disentangle yourself if you can' (āropito te vādo, niggahīto 'si. Cara vādappamokkhāya, nibbethehi vā sace pahosīti).2 From such passages, it is not right to jump to the conclusion that Buddha condemned or prohibited the holding of all disputations on religious matters. In fact, the Dīgha Nikāya¹ has a Disputation indispensable in the spread of a religion; Buddhism was no exception to it.

Dīgh. Nik., I, p. 12 (Dial. of Buddha Vol., II,p. 26).
 Dīgh.-Nik., I, p. 8 (Ibid., p. 15).

passage which may mislead one into the opinion that all disputations were discouraged by Buddha but in fact only such discussions as those pointed out above were meant to be avoided. The correct construction should therefore be this that the disputants should have the elicitation of truth as their object and not the obscuration of same by the use and counter-use of words which serve only to mystify. The bhikkhus should have love of truth and nothing but the truth. The defeat of the opponent in a wordy fight is but a way of self-assertion which contributes to self-conceit and lowers thereby the inner man It was disputafrom the spiritual standpoint. tion of such a character that Buddha condemned. Such verbal passages at arms often took place regarding points which can never be decided by disputation. Such subjects are the indeterminable problems which cannot be solved by disputation but may, if at all, be realized in the highest stages of dhyana. The feelings and realizations during the prosecution of dhyana cannot be felt or realized by those who have not had the experiences personally and hence the wide gulf that has always existed between the two classes of men. Words intended to describe the experiences appear meaningless or untrue to the lay people who think that argumentation on the lines approved by logic can take them to the highest truths. It was in view of this gulf between the two classes of men that the Hindu rsis asked their lay followers to follow the Hindu scriptures without questioning them, allowing, of course, the conflict between two or more passages on a point to be removed by the methods prescribed therefor. Hence it would, I think, be apparent that Buddha was not unreasonable in what he said, and it is wide of the truth to suppose that he enjoined the bhikkhus to avoid all vain disputations.

I Dīgh. Nik., I, Brahmajāla Sutta.

It should also be kept in mind that the state of the country at the time of Buddha was not such as could permit a missionary to keep clear of disputation. One of the essential works of a missionary is to convince his audience, and this is hardly possible if argumentation is given a wide berth. At the time of Buddha, accounts are available of brāhmaṇa and non-brāhmaṇa heads of religions, wandering about over the whole of eastern India, sometimes with their numerous disciples, and holding disputations with the heads of the rival sects to assert their influence and increase their following. There were the paribbājakas who wandered about with their minds open for the reception of religious light wherever available. The lay people also liked to hear disputations as indicated by their setting up of kutūhala-sālās (halls for people in quest of truths) or paribbājakārāmas in different places where the wandering teachers may reside and hold controversies with convenience and sometimes in the midst of a large gathering composed of men flocking to the place from the neighbouring localities. The people felt proud if a good many religious teachers visited their kutūhalasālās or paribbājakārāmas. References are available in plenty in the Buddhist works showing that it was often stated at the disputations that the defeated teacher with his followers would relinquish his own doctrines and embrace those of the winner. These defects in disputations were a fruitful source for the enlisting of converts to the many doctrines and religions that prevailed in the country at the time and the teachers vied and struggled with one another for getting the largest following for leading

Sam. Nik., II, p. 32; V, p. 115; Majjh. Nik., II, pp. 1, 2, 99; Divyāvadāna, p. 143.

56

them to the highest spiritual goal. The discussions among the teachers of the rival sects indicate that they had to be well-grounded not only in the rules by which the disputation was guided and the argumentation was rendered free from fallacies, but also in the doctrines of the various opponents who had to be faced, over and above their own school of tenets and practices with their philosophical bases, if any. In view of these facts, it is incorrect to hold that Buddha laid down a prohibition for entering into religious controversies. He himself has been described in several places in the Buddhist works as a master of the tenets and practices of the heretical sects. A large number of his disciples was recruited either as the result of defeats suffered by the opponents or from among the followers of the brahmanic and the heretical teachers convinced of the superiority of the doctrines propounded to them. discussions with Sonadanda, Kūtadanta, Upāli, Sakuludāyi, Vekhanassa, Assalāyana and a host of others are instances in which he argued out his own views and convinced his adversaries at the end. The victories thus gained in large numbers in disputations elicited the remark from Dīghatapassi, a Jaina monk to the effect that Gautama was a sorcerer who by the force of his art drew the people of other sects into his own net1. The list of his disciples who were convinced and won over to Buddhism from their own beliefs and practices is a large one, from which the names of the following may be given here by way of illustration. Those named here are among the foremost of Buddha's followers and were well-versed in the doctrines and practices of the sects to which they belonged before conversion: Mahākotthita, Piņdola Bharadvāja, Mahākaccāyana, for instance, were masters of the three Vedas and perfect in all the accomplishments of a brahmana; Sāriputta and Moggalāna were the chief disciples of Sanjaya with whose teachings they could not be satisfied; the Kassapas were the leaders of the Jațilas; Abhayarājakumāra was a distinguished disciple of Nigantha Nataputta who deputed him for his intellectual acumen and mastery over the Jaina doctrines and philosophy to hold a controversy with Buddha.

It was Buddha's practice to deliver his dis-

<sup>1</sup> Majjh.Nik., I, p. 375; Ang. Nik., II, p. 190. (Gotamo māyāvī, āvaṭṭaniṃ māyaṃ jānāti yāya añňatit-thiyānaṃ sāvakā āvaṭṭetíti.)

courses through dialogues in the following four ways:

(1) Paţipucchāvyākaranīya;

Four ways of delivering discourses through dialogues. (2) Ekamsavyākaranīya;

(3) Vibhajjavyākaraņīya; and

(4) Thapanīya1.

In the first method, the doubts of the interlocutor are ascertained by suitable questionings and removed by suitable replies; in the second, a direct reply is given to an enquirer without entering into a discussion with him; in the third, answers are made piecemeal i.e. taking one aspect of the question first and then another and so forth2; in the fourth, the indeterminate nature of the problems put to him for solution is pointed out to avoid discussions on same, as they lead to no finality. It was for this as also for other reasons stated already that he wanted the bhikkhus to avoid these topics in their discussions3. Even if these subjects be set aside, those on which discussions were allowed left room enough for the play of keen intelligence and subtle arguments.

I Dīgh. Nik., III, p. 229.

<sup>2</sup> For an illustration of this method, see Majih. Nik., II, p. 197.

<sup>3</sup> Digh. Nik., I. pp. 187ff.

To be a successful disputant, one has to be equipped with all the outfit of specious arguments (kūtatarka) to meet those opponents who make a free use of them whenever needed. It is clear from Buddha's injunctions to the bhikkhus, that he wanted them to use their power of argumentation in the service of truth. and truth alone, and not to take to sophistry of their own accord. But a preacher ignorant of the wiles of a specious arguer and unable to use counter-wiles for self-defence would certainly be a weak disputant. It was for this reason perhaps that we see Buddha applying such a method with men who came to argue with crooked intention, or took to crooked ways of disputation. This is seen in the Ambattha Sutta1 where Buddha, in order to silence Ambattha, who claimed the superiority of brahmanas over all by birth and stated that Sākyas were of servile origin, relates the fictitious account of the origin of the Sākyas and Kanhayanas showing that the latter were the descendants of a dasiputta (son of a slavegirl) of the former. The object of the use of the story was to put it as a stunner to Ambattha exposing his really low origin.

I Digh. Nik., I, pp. 92, 95.

This, however, could not achieve the desired end. Ultimately Ambattha was made to admit his low parentage by a miracle. The sutta makes it clear that as the use of logic pure and simple would have been inefficacious in a debate with a conceited person like Ambattha, Buddha took to the right means of correcting him.

Detailed accounts of disputations with Buddha are rare in the Buddhist literature. Such an account is found in the Culasaccaka Sutta of the Majjhima Nikāya<sup>1</sup>, in which a disputation took place between Buddha and Saccaka Niganthaputta, a great disputant of the time. A summary of the account will give the reader an idea of the ways in which the Buddhists had to meet and parry the attacks of their opponents in such a contest: When Bhagava was dwelling at Vesāli, Saccaka Niganthaputta proclaimed that he did not find any person who would not quake in fear to enter into a debate with him. He had heard of the teaching of Buddha to the effect that each of the five skandhas is anicca (impermanent) and anatta (devoid of a permanent entity). He denounced it as a wrong view and was anxious to meet

I Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 227ff.

Buddha for a discussion. He went to Buddha at the Kūṭagārasālā with 500 Licchavis to witness the latter's defeat in the disputation. After taking his seat, Saccaka said, "I wish to put a proposition (desam) to you, if you permit me to do so." On obtaining assent, he put questions.

Saccaka. What instructions are generally imparted by you to your disciples?

Buddha. (I teach) Body is impermanent, Sensation is impermanent, Perception is impermanent, the Mentations are impermanent, Consciousness is impermanent. Body is insubstantial, Sensation is insubstantial, and so on. All compounded things are impermanent and void of substance.

S. An illustration presents itself to my mind.

B. Say as it appears to your mind.

Just as whatsoever seeds and plants grow and expand and come to maturity do so all in dependence upon the earth, and, firm-based upon the earth, and, thus come to maturity, and just as whatsoever deeds that require strength are all done in dependence upon the earth, and firm-based upon the earth, thus these deeds are done, in the self-same way, by Body is this individual man and, firm-based upon Body, does he bring forth deeds good or evil. By Sensation etc. etc.

B. Thou sayest, 'Body is my self, sensation is my self, etc.'

S. I say, 'Body, Sensation etc. each of these is my self.'

B. What thinkest thou, Aggivessana, does a reigning khattiya king, such as King Pasenadi of Kosala, 8 possess the power of pronouncing and causing to be carried out sentences of death, outlawry and banishment?

- S. Yes.
- B. Inasmuch as thou hast but now said, 'Body is my self,' doest thou possess this power over body 'Let my body be thus, let not my body be so?' Thus questioned, Saccaka sat silent. Buddha repeats his question to which Saccaka replies.
  - S. That I have not.
- B. Consider, and then give answer, for thy last does not tally with thy first nor thy first with thy last. Body, Sensation, etc. are permanent or impermanent?
  - S. They are impermanent.
  - B. Is that painful or is it pleasurable?
  - S. It is painful.
- B. But that which is impermanent, painful, subject to all vicissitudes—is it possible thus to regard it, 'This is mine; this am I; this is my Self?'
  - S. That is not possible.
- B. Can such a one who holds the view, 'This is mine; this am I; this is my Self,' comprehend suffering or keep clear of the suffering that encompasses him?
  - S. He cannot.
- B. Just as a wood-cutter seeking solid (sāra) wood, goes to forest and cuts the root of a Banana tree and then chops off the head, leaves etc., but fails to get at the pith, so also you by entering into disputation with me have found your doctrine vain and useless<sup>1</sup>.
  - I The portion in smaller types has been abridged

The paribbājakas and the members of the various contemporary religious orders offered a very fruitful field for the recruitment of converts to

How the paribbāja-kas and the various religious orders helped the spread of Buddhism.

Buddhism. The embracing of the religion of the victor by the vanquished in a debate was a general practice and this proved an effective means of spreading Buddhism, because Buddha himself as well as many Buddhist preachers were powerful disputants. It is a peculiar feature of the time that members of many of the religious orders attached more importance to belief based on reasoning than to blind faith, and pursuant to this state of things, the vanquished in a disputation left his religious belief as soon as it was brought home to him in a public debate that there was a flaw in the chain of reasoning upon which his belief was based, while no such flaw could be pointed out in the reasoning upon which the belief of the victor was founded. No stigma attached to the relinquishment of a religious belief by reason of defeat in a controversy or by a change in faith brought about in other ways. It was not so in from Bhikkhu Silācāra's First Fifty Discourses, Vol. II, pp. 84-88.

later times when the ceremonial and social exterior of religion almost ceased to have a living connection with the inner conviction of an individual. At the time of which we are speaking, many students after finishing their education used to wander about in the various parts of India as paribbājakas in order to learn the various religious doctrines and gain mastery over the art of disputation1. They were at liberty to embrace any religion that appealed to them most as the vehicle of ultimate truths. In spite of the parents' objection, we read of many instances of young brahmanas and ksattriyas joining the Buddhist order. It was this state of things that helped Buddha and his band of preachers a good deal in the spread of the religion. The conversion of the followers of Sanjaya counting among them Sariputta and Moggalana, the Jatilas, Pokkharasādi, Sakuludāyī, Mahākassapa Acela, Cañki, Esukāri, Ghoţamukha, Vekha-

I Majjh. Nik., II, p. 148. Assalāyana, a master of brāhmaņical lore, was asked whether he had wandered about as a paribbājaka (to complete his education) "Caritam kho pana bhotā Assalāyanena paribbājakam; ma bhavam Assalāyano ayuddhaparājitam parājayîti." See also Dr. Barua's Pre-Buddhistic Indian Philosophy, p. 192.

nassa, Saccaka, and a host of others signifies a good record of Buddha's success in conversion among the paribbājakas and the religious orders both brāhmaṇical and non-brāhmaṇical. Dhammika upāsaka in the Sutta-Nipāta was right in saying that the disputing titthiyas, Ājīvakas, Nigaṇthas, many of whom were aged, submitted to the captivating power of Buddha's exposition of his religion. The influx of converts from the aforesaid classes was so great that Buddha had to introduce a bar to a ready ingress of undesirable men into the order by laying down that those who belonged to a religious order must pass a period of probation for four months.

(e) The dialectic method of preaching was adopted by Buddha very frequently. This method had a great resemblance to Socratic dialogues. At the beginning of his discourse, he tried to have an idea of the leanings of the persons by putting to them questions on religious matters or answering the questions that he allowed them to put to himself. In this way he used to select a subject most suited to the occasion and agreeable to the persons composing the audience and delivered a discourse on same. He preferred to use the popular dialect as the medium of his discourse. Similes, parables, fables very often drawn from experiences of every day life were interspersed with his speeches along with pithy verses to make his arguments sweet and effective1. attached great importance to the art of preaching and tried to impress upon the minds of his disciples the sense of its importance. particular features by which his speeches were rendered so very impressive were, first because he utilized his higher knowledge abhiññā, by which he could find out the persons who would benefit by his discourses on a particular day; secondly because the selection of the subjects of his discourses was the result of a correct diagnosis (sanidana) of the mentality of the listeners2; and thirdly because he utilized his occult powers (pāṭihāriya) in three ways, viz. iddhis (the of the Hindu Yogaśāstras) rddhis impressed his audience with at the awe sight manifestation of powers ostensibly in transgression of the physical laws; ādesanā or the exhibition of his power of thought-reading; and anusāsani or the warning to a person to give up his discursive or evil thoughts revealed to Buddha through thoughtreading1.

Sutta Nipāta, p. 67.

<sup>2</sup> Majih. Nik., I, p. 391; Vinaya, I, p. 69.

<sup>1</sup> Dr. Oldenberg's Buddha (Hoey's trans.) pp. 185-193.

<sup>2</sup> Divyāvadāna, pp. 96, 124] "Āŝayānuśayam viditvā dhātum prakṛtim ca jnātvā tādṛśi dharmadeśanā kṛtā".

Buddha foresaw the abuses incidental to the cultivation and use of such powers by his disciples, for many of them might be in a lower plane of spiritual culture and utilize them for selfish ends. To avoid such abuses, he strictly enjoined his disciples not to display such powers before the householders2. In the opinion of Buddha, a good preacher should conform to the following rules :-

- (a) He should in ordinary discourses before householders make them gradual i. e. commence with dānakatham, sīlakatham, etc3.
- (b) Observe sequence (pariyāyadassāvī) in the details composing a theme;
- (c) Use words of compassion (anuddayatam paticca katham).
- (d) Avoid irrelevant matters (nāmisantara katham) and
  - I Ang. Nik., I, p. 276; Dīgh. Nik., I, pp. 212-214.
- Vinaya, II, p. 112; na bhikkhave gihinam uttarimanussadhammam iddhipātihāriyam dassetabbam.
  - 3 See ante, pp. 47, 48.

(e) Make his speeches free from caustic remarks against others1.

In the 5th century B. c. there was no paramount sovereingnty in Northern India which was divided into a large number of independent states. Of these, the four monarchies of Magadha, Kosala, Vatsa, and Avanti rose into importance and fought with one viii. Patronage of kings, clans and others.

The number of preachers of various religions, working in all these domains, was large and the more prominent among them vied with one another for gaining the support of one or other of the several kings. There are passages in the Buddhist scriptures hinting that Buddha was anxious to enlist the sympathy and patronage of kings, clans, and noblemen in support of his religion. The story of the conversion of Malla Roja, a nobleman, shows explicitly the anxiety felt by Buddha on this score. When Buddha was entering the city of the Mallas, Malla Roja went to welcome him, not out of reverence but for avoiding the liability of paying a fine laid down by the

<sup>1</sup> Ang. Nik., III, pp. 184, 196.

<sup>2</sup> Dr. Rhys Davids' Buddhist India, p. 3.

Mallas for those who refused to welcome Buddha. When he came near Buddha, he spoke out to Ananda his real feeling at which the latter became sorrowful and requested Buddha to work upon the mind of Malla Roja in such a way as to make him one of his ardent adherents, because he was a distinguished nobleman whose influence and example would go a great way towards making Buddhism popular in the locality. Buddha agreed and overcame the indifferent attitude of Malla Roja by exercising the feeling of love (metta), whereby he was won over to the doctrine1. Though we do not come across any express passage in the Sutta Piţaka showing that Buddha is acting with a similar motive to any of the royal personages, his direction to his disciples in the Vinaya Pitaka to fix the day of commencement of the vassāvāsa in compliance with the wishes of Bimbisāra on a particular occasion points to the same inference2.

The first king met by Buddha after his enlightenment was the Magadhan king Bimbisāra who accorded him a very warm welcome, placed at Buddha's disposal his pleasure-garden and asked the headmen of the villages in his domain to listen to Buddha's discourses. Tti was most probably for Bimbisara Rimbisāra Buddha gained a very wide that of Magadha. popularity in Magadha<sup>1</sup>. The king was bent so much upon the welfare of the sangha that he issued the decree that none must do any harm to the Sākyaputtiya samanas<sup>2</sup> and on many occasions he advised Buddha to frame rules for the welfare of the sangha. Some of these rules are, for example, not to give ordination to those who were in royal service, as the kings who were not in favour of the faith might harass the sangha on that ground3; to hold religious assemblies on the 8th, 14th and 15th day of each month like the other religious orders for the benefit of the upāsakas4.

I Vinaya, Mahavagga, VI, 36, 1-4.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., III, 4.

70

Pasenadi was also a great benefactor of Buddha and his sangha, but he does not seem to have given his unqualified support like Bimbi-

Pasenadi of Kosala.

Though he supported many brahmana teachers, yet his attention to the welfare of Buddha and his sangha was not less than that shown to those

I Mahavastu, III, p. 449.

<sup>2</sup> Vinaya, MV., I, 42, I.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., I, 40, 4.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid., II, 1-4; see infra.

teachers. His anxiety to make a suitable gift to Ananda1, his joy at the conversion of the robber Angulimāla who was given immunity for his past misdeeds and was promised a supply of the requisites for a monk2; his earnest desire to marry a Sākya princess and his ultimate marriage with Vāsabhakhattiyā to regain the confidence of the monks lost through inattentions to them3; his expression of pride at the fact that he was of the same age with Buddha and belonged to the same caste and province with him4 amply show his love for the religion and his desire to be counted as one of its well-wishers and supporters. In the Nikāyas it is stated that he became a lay-devotee and an ardent admirer of Buddha. The basrelief depicting him as proceeding to meet Buddha shows that he was respected by the Buddhists of the 2nd or 3rd century B. C. as a patron of the religion.

It is doubtful how far Buddha was successful

2 Ibid, II, p. 101.

4 Majjh. Nik., II, p. 124.

<sup>1</sup> Majjh. Nik., II, p. 116.

<sup>3</sup> Burlingame's Buddhist Legends, I, p. 91.

<sup>5</sup> Sam. Nik., I, p. 70; Ang. Nik., V, pp. 65 ff; see also Divyāvaaāna, p. 154.

in winning over the other two monarchs, Pajjota

Caṇḍa Pajjota of Avanti aud Udena of Kosambi. of Avanti and Udena of Kosambī. The references to these kings in the Buddhist scriptures are few and far between. It is said that king Pajjota once sent Mahākaccāyana to welcome Buddha to his dominion, but Buddha, thinking his purpose would be better served by Mahākaccāyana himself preaching the doctrine, did not accede to the king's request. king was satisfied with Mahākaccāyana's exposition of the Law and became an ardent follower of the religion 1. The Samyutta Nikāya 2 and the Tibetan translation of the Vinaya3 state that king Udena of Kosambī became a convert to Buddhism. The Dhammapadatthakathā gives in detail the occasion of king Udena's conversion. He was much impressed by the piety of one of his queens Sāmāvatī who had been an upāsikā of Buddha and at whose request the king became a convert to the religion and made generous gifts4. Evidence is not strong that these two kings actively aided the spread of

I Psalms of the Brethren, pp. 238-9.

<sup>2</sup> Sam. Nik., IV, p. 113.

<sup>3</sup> Rockhill's Life of the Buddha, p. 74.

<sup>4</sup> Burlingame's Buddhist Legends, I, p. 84.

Buddhism but yet it is a great gain that they did not actively oppose its propagation. The mere tolerance of the activities of the Buddhist preachers within their kingdoms should be taken as a favourable circumstance in the spread of the religion.

Buddha was successful in making a large number of converts from among the nobles, ministers, bankers and wealthy ministers, bankers and wealthy citizens. That the enlistment of the supports of Anāthapindika, Visākhā, Sīha, Abhayarājakumāra, Jīvaka, Yasa, Ambapālī, Nandaka, etc., furthered the cause of Buddhism to a very great extent needs hardly any comment.

Support from influential men.

Last but not the least was the support obtained by Buddha from the various clans of the period. Inspite of the fact that Mahāvīra had already been in the field and obtained a footing among the clans, Buddha was fairly successful in his missionary activities. It was not very difficult for Buddha to win over the Sākyas because he himself was of the clan. Anuruddha, Kimbila, Bhagu, Ānanda, Devadatta, Nanda, Upāli and many other Sākyas joined the order at Buddha's request. Under the leadership of

I For detailed treatment, see infra. V.

Mahāpajāpati Gotamī<sup>1</sup>, many Sākyan ladies also followed the example of the Sākyan youths and joined the order leading to the growth of the order of nuns.

Next to the Sākyas, the Licchavis and the Mallas came under the influence of

The Licchavis and the Mallas.

Buddha's teaching. Buddha paid three visits to Vesāli, the city of the Licchavis, and by his preachings brought home to them the charm of Buddhism. He converted many distinguished members of the clan and obtained from them gifts of cetiyas. His work among the Mallas was also successful. It was perhaps as a token of favour to the faithful Mallas that Buddha selected Kusinārā, a upavana within their country, as a suitable place for his mahāparinibbāna. 3

Buddha's missionary activity among the Bhaggas and the Koliyas was not perhaps so successful as among the previously stated clans. Buddha visited three nigamas of the Koliyas, and Ānanda one, but there is a remarkable paucity in the number of the converts mentioned

I Majjh. Nik., I, p. 462; S. B. E., XIX, pp. 226-227.

<sup>2</sup> Dīgh. Nik., II, p. 102.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., II, p. 169.

as hailing from those places. Still less successful was Buddha's religious mission to the Bhaggas. The only place that was visited by Buddha was the Bhesakalāvana deer-park near Suṃsumāragiri and the persons won over were Nakula's parents and Bodhirājakumāra<sup>2</sup>.

We do not hear of other clans coming under the influence of Buddhism except in the statement of the Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta that the Bulis of Allakappa and the Moriyas of Pipphalivana along with the clans already mentioned claimed Buddha's relics for erecting stūpas in their respective countries.

Thus we see that Buddhism owed much of its expansion to Buddha's ability in securing sympathy and patronage of kings, nobles, and clans, who in many cases had already been supporting other religions. Though later in the field, Buddhism could supplant at times the other religions, ultimately monopolising the sympathy and support of some of the magnates.

The part played by women<sup>3</sup> in the spread ı Kakkarapattam, Haliddavasanam, Uttaram, and Sapugam.

<sup>2</sup> Majjh. Nik., II, p. 91.

<sup>3</sup> I am indebted to Dr. B. M. Barua for suggesting this point.

of Buddhism cannot be ignored or brushed aside as of little importance. On many occasions it ix.

Part played by ladies in the spread of Buddhism.

was through their influence that whole families were converted to Buddhism. Visākhā and Ambapālī, for instance, rendered signal services to the sangha by their munificent gifts and the former's work was more valuable because she became the means of conversion of all the members of her father-in-law's family from Jainism to Buddhism. Anātha-piṇḍika's daughter made it possible through her exertions to establish a centre of Buddhism in Anga through the conversion of the whole of her father-in-law's family¹. The conversion of king Udena was effected through one of her queens named Sāmāvatī². It was with the help of the brāhmaṇa girls of Sākya family married at Bhadramukha that Buddha could convert Meṇdaka gahapati³. Instancs like this can be multiplied to show that ladies helped a good deal in the propagation of Buddhism.

The formation of the order of nuns was highly appreciated by the womenfolk generally, while at the same time it furthered the cause of Buddhism to a great extent. Not only did it afford relief to many a woman in her knawing miseries but it also recognised the dignified position in which the women had claim to be placed along with the men through the implication that they were as much eligible to the making of efforts for spiritual emancipation as the males. Those of the nuns who could enter into the mysteries of the religion naturally felt an inclination to initiate others into the same mysteries and offer them a permanent solace in their lives. They like the bhikkhus visited the householders and through their easy access to the ladies of the houses had greater opportunities of working upon their impressionable minds and enlisting them either as lay-devotees or nuns. Conversions of this nature were frequent and there are examples in the Therigatha of women becoming nuns through the exertions of the advanced bhikkhunis. bhikkhunīs thus carried the light of the new religion from house to house and helped the spread of Buddhism far and wide.

Kern's Manual of Indian Buddhism, pp. 37-38.

<sup>2</sup> See ante, pp. 72-3.

<sup>3</sup> Divyāvadāna, p. 128.

The last factor but not the least was the resert to occult powers to bring conviction home to the minds of the unconvinced and make them converts. In writing of the spread of a religion, or the life of a founder of a religion, scholars, as a rule, leave this factor out of account, as it is not looked upon as in keeping with the standpoint of the present-day material sciences. It may be said that if once the possession and use of the occult powers be admitted and believed, there will be no criterion Resort to occult powers. by which to sift out the actual expression of the occult powers from the fiction with which the credulous writers would in course of time mix them up, and in consequence, the grossest absurdities will have credence. But apart from the question as to which of the exhibitions of such powers are to be believed and which to be disbelieved, the point that has to be settled is whether it is reasonable to leave altogether out of account a factor without which there would certainly be left a gap in the aggregate of causes that are responsible for the degree and range of influence of a particular religion at a particular time. We often notice in the account of the life of the founder of a religion or its branch that mere disputations, mere appeals to the intellect and reason often fail to convince a person of the truth of a statement or the power of the arguer to lead to the path that takes one to the summum bonum of human life. Argumentators, however powerful, are often found to cause bitterness of feeling unless they are aided by other factors including the one under discussion. An exemplary character, a persuasive tongue, acuteness of intellignece, self-abnegation and other elements that make a strong and imposing personality are not sufficient to produce the results that were actually achieved by the founders of religions like Christ, Buddha, Muhammad, others. A single leper healed by the mere touch of Christ, the power of vision restored to a single blind man are more effective in the spread of a religion than numberless victories in disputations. But such powers are disbelieved by us of this material age, the age of the predominance of the physical sciences and the general ignorance of the spiritual. In the life of Buddha, we meet with many cases where mere arguments failed to achieve the desired ends, and ultimately, resort was had to occult powers. It should not be supposed that I am advocating belief in the existence of such powers as the result of my credulity. I have not, on the other hand, the least objection to making the rules of criticism for keeping facts apart from fiction as stringent as possible. What I want to contend for is that a most powerful factor in the spread of a religion should not be left out of account, and the rest of the factors put forward as suffi80

78

EXTERNAL FORCES

cient to produce the results achieved by its founder and his disciples within a particular period. The influence of the mere fact that occult powers are possessed and used by a certain preacher high in spiritual culture goes a great way in disarming opposition to him. not speak of the details in which such powers may be manifested, for the descriptions of such details offer opportunities for mixing fiction with facts. I am only speaking of the fact of mere possession of such powers and their use within the limits natural to the laws governing their use; for the powers obtained as special gifts of nature, or acquired by sadhana (spiritual devotion and discipline) have to work through the human frame, which by its own limitations naturally obstructs and limits the expression of the powers. India has been noted for ages as the land of those who are adepts in spiritual matters. Yoga and sādhana have nowhere been so much cultured as in this country. The treatises on these methods sādhana from Patanjali downwards speak certain occult powers as naturally acquired by the true sādhakas. The assertions of these works are put aside by scholars trained in the western methods of criticism and acquainted merely with the laws of the material world laid down in the works on the physical sciences. But utterly ignorant as they are of these matters, they do not hesitate to speak as authorities on spiritual matters, and as ignorance of these things is the order of the day, they naturally have a large following. So long as the West does not see eye to eye with the East in this respect and researches do not settle it definitely how far to believe and how far to disbelieve, it is certainly risky to try to sift the truth from fiction in the details furnished by the scriptures; but the position may yet be thus far clear to some intimate with the life of any of the few Indian sādhakas of the true stamp that the possession and use of the occult powers are not an unreality and their influence as a factor in the spread of religion is not less if not greater than any other.

III

Magadha

It will be evident from what has been said in the previous section that Magadha was a suitable place for the origin and development of non-brāhmanic religions like Buddhism. we look back to the remote period when it was known as Kīkaṭa, it was even then considered by the orthodox brahmanas as wanting in sanctity and unsuitable for the performance of sacrifices. It shows that it was for a long time disliked by the orthodox brahmanas as a place of habitation and therefore its inhabitants lived in comparative freedom from brahmanic orthodoxy. Hence it is that we find in the Majjhima Nikāya² that Sakuludāyi paribbājaka is telling Buddha that in ancient times Magadha 'seethed with sophistic discussions. That this country was a centre of intellectual activity is evident from the Sāmañaphala account king Ajātasattu's interview with six sophistic

I See ante, pp. 36-38.

<sup>2</sup> Majjh. Nik., II p. 2.

MAGADHA

teachers". The attraction of the country for non-brāhmaṇic religious teachers was heightened by reason of the fact that it was not only suitable for free expression of religious views but also for the advantages offered by it for the propagation of those views among a large number of people who naturally went there on account of its political importance. The Existence of a number of both brāhmaṇic and non-brāhmaṇic religious views in Magadha. Brahmajālasutta which was delivered by Buddha at Rājagaha gives us a panoramic view of the various doctrines prevailing at the time. Many of the doctrines might be classed as brāhmaṇic while the rest were non-brāhmaṇic. I mention below the names of a few adherents of brāhmaṇic and non-brāhmaṇic doctrines, having their abodes at Rājagaha. The brāhmaṇic religious teacher Rudraka Rāmaputra had his āśrama at the place. Prince Siddhārtha became one of his disciples at the commencement of his renunciation, and practised under his guidance self-mortifications along with the disciples of Rudraka<sup>2</sup>. Sañjaya Belaṭṭhaputta, a teacher of

Dr. Barua's Pre-Buddhistic Indian Philosophy, p. 281.
 Mahāvastu, II, p. 207; Watters, Yuan Chwang, II, p. 142.

non-brāhmanic doctrines, had also his āśrama there with Sariputta and Moggalana as his chief disciples1. There was again the brahmanical teacher Kūtadanta maintained by grants of villages from Bimbisāra2. He used to perform sacrifices on grand scales, killing hundreds of animal victims on the occasions. There was no lack of teachers believing that supernatural powers and heavenly happiness could be obtained through rigorous ascetic practices3. Sāmañnaphala and other suttas4 make it clear that the distinguished teachers of non-brahmanic doctrines viz. Purāņa Kassapa, Ajita Kesakambalin, Makkhali Gosāla, Pakudha Kaccāyana, and Nigantha Nataputta with their disciples dwelt in different parts of Magadha from time to time. The noteworthy fact, not of course peculiar to Magadha, is that the monarch viz. Bimbisāra and Ajātasattu were tolerant to both brāhmaņic and non-brāhmaņic cults, and extended their patronage to the brahmana teachers quite as much as to the Buddhist and Jaina monks,

I Vinaya, I, pp. 39ff.

<sup>2</sup> Dīgh. Nik., I, pp. 127ff.

<sup>3</sup> For details, see Buddhist India, pp. 140-146; Dr. Barua's Pre-Buddhistic Indian Philosophy, pp. 188ff.

<sup>4</sup> Digh. Nik., I, pp. 47ff; Maijh. Nik., II, 2ff.

by virtue of which they all claimed the sovereigns as their devoted followers<sup>1</sup>.

Thus we see that Buddha had to encounter the opposition of a large number of sects but fortunately he had this advantage that there were several sects whose views were far from the Buddha and the brāhma-nas.

brāhmaṇic standpoint. This was however but as a few rays of light in the gloom of opposition that darkened the path of progress and hindered him in his onward march. He had phenomenal success in the brāhmaṇa villages of Khānumata and Ekānālā where he could win over to his side two renowned brāhmaṇas Kūṭadanta and Kasibharadvāja². The piṭakas, though silent on Buddha's failure, mention as an example of Buddha's triumph over Māra, that in the brāhmaṇa village Pañcasālā, he could not obtain a single spoonful of rice in his begging round³. From this we get a glimpse into the volume of opposition that Buddha had to encounter on certain occasions. There are also in the Nikāyas passing allusions to the frivolous grounds on which his opponents wanted to make his path thorny. Some brahmanas, for instance, tried to rouse oppositions to him by saying that Buddha was wanting in reverence towards the aged brahmanas and claimed superiority over them1. Buddha had also to meet with opposition from the influential brahmanas e.g. the minister of Ajātasattu who instigated other members of his caste to alienate the people from Buddha by saying broadcast that all the blessings that man desired could be had from them and they need not seek Buddha's help in the matter2. It was through his personality, his appealing way of preaching a rational dhamma, his ability in disputations with the brahmanas and laying bare their weak points, and his firm stand against the abuses of belief and religion prevailing at the time that he could win over people including many brahmanas to his side.

I Ind. Ant., XLV, p. 12; Dīgh. Nik, I, pp. 114, 127.

<sup>2</sup> Dīgh. Nik., I, pp. 117ff.; Sam. Nik., I, pp. 172, 173; Sutta Nipāta, p. 13.

<sup>3</sup> Sam. Nik., I, p. 114.

The resistance, offered by the non-brāhmaṇical sects, many of whose objects and methods of spiritual training were akin to those of Buddhism, was in no way less than that of the brāhmaṇas. I have, of course, in mind the intensity of the feeling of opposition that the members of the different sects entertained towards the new rival sect. But as the followers of brahmanic religion were far too many in comparison with those of the non-brāhmanic sects, the chances of Buddha and his disciples coming into collision with them were much greater than with those of the afore-The episodes of Buddha meeting said sects. with opposition from the members of the other religious sects have this peculiar feature about them that the opposition from the non-brahmanic sects exceeds in many cases the limits mere verbal disputations rising up to resorts to practical make-shifts for blackening Buddha's character, while the opposition from the members of brahmanic sects did not, as a rule, cross the said limits.

I Sutta Nipāta, p. 50.

<sup>2</sup> Avadāna Śataka, pp. 83, 84.

MAGADHA

Sañjaya Belaṭṭhaputta, the centre of whose activities was at Rājagaha, was the first non-brāhmaṇic religious teacher to feel the power of Buddha and Sañjaya Belatthaputta. the religion preached by Buddha for within a very short time he saw that half of his following had been won over to Buddha's side. It was

Assaji, a disciple of Buddha, who commenced the onslaught by converting Sāriputta, the principal follower of Sañjaya to Buddhism, and Sāriputta in his turn followed him up until half of his quondam fellow disciples embraced Buddhism. This event together with the previous conversions made by Buddha and his followers created in Magadha a sensation which served as the basis of the remark found in the Vinaya that Buddha took into his order 1000 Jațilas, 250 followers of Sanjaya, and the sons of distinguished Magadhan families, thereby making the families sonless and the wives husbandless, and there was no knowing who might be taken in next.

Nigantha Nātaputta was a formidable rival of Buddha, and as he was at work earlier than Buddha, he made a fair progress Buddha and Nigantha-Nātaputta. Magadha and the neighbouring states. It appears from the accounts of conversions to Buddhism, that Buddha accounts of conversions to Buddhism that Buddha could not convert the followers of Nātaputta in large numbers, as he did the followers of other cults. But he stole a march upon Nātaputta by being able to enlist among his upāsakas Bimbisāra and Ajātasattu who had been laysupporters of Nātaputta<sup>2</sup>. Though a religion

I Vinaya, I, pp. 39-44.

<sup>2</sup> The Jaina agamas claim Bimbisara and Ajatasattu as Jainas while the Buddhist pitakas declare them as Buddhists. Neither the Jaina nor the Buddhist litera-

MAGADHA

spreads irrespective of the social or political position of the people, the spread of religion is facilitated by the conversion of influential people, because, after all, the masses at times follow in such matters the example of leaders held by them in high esteem, for they lack in many cases the capacity to judge the merit of two rival religions which agitate the country. The importance of the conversion of Bimbisāra to Buddhism will appear from what he did for it. He continued to be its warm supporter and allowed one of his queens ture admits that they were supporters of the religions at different times or at the same time in different degrees. The facts of the lives of the two emperors, however, point to the inference that Bimbisara supported Jainism when it appeared on the field but inclined decidedly towards Buddhism when it asserted itself as a rival of Jainism. Ajātasattu was a supporter of Devadatta who initiated a sect holding views similar to Jainism so far as its discipline was concerned. Abhayarājakumara, a Jaina, expostulated with Buddha for condemning Devadatta. This shows that Devadatta had Jaina sympathies and Ajātasattu by supporting him shows the nature of his religious views. He, however, was converted to Buddhism a year before Buddha's parinibbāņa (Mr. V. A. Smith's Early History of India, p. 33).

not only to be an upāsikā but also later on a nun1. He persuaded his subjects to become lay-devotees of Buddha, paved the way for the conversion of Rudrayana, king of Roruka2, made a gift of the Veluvana garden to the Buddhist order for use as a resort of bhikkhus and gave advice to Buddha in regard to the framing of some of the Vinaya rules. So great was his confidence in Buddha that he did not allow a competition of miraculous powers between Buddha and some of the teachers of non-brahmanical sects who requested him to arrange for These teachers were afterwards defeated by Buddha at a competition which was arranged by Pasenadi, king of Kosala, at their request3. Buddha had occasions to enter into discussion with four distinguished disciples of Nataputta at Nālandā which was a stronghold of Jainism. These four disciples were Abhayarājakumāra4, Asibandhakaputta gāmaņī, Upāli, and Dīgha-

<sup>1</sup> Psalms of the Sisters, pp. 81, 82; Manorathapūraņī, I, p. 345.

<sup>2</sup> Divyāvadāna, pp. 550ff.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., pp. 143ff; Prof. Kern's Manual, p. 33.

<sup>4</sup> Majjh. Nik., I, p. 392.: Prince Abhaya was one of the chief patrons of Nigantha Nātaputta's order (Dr. Barua, op. cit., p. 375).

tapassī1. With the exception of the last named ascetic, the rest were, as the result of the disputations, converted to Buddhism<sup>2</sup>. So far Buddha's missionary work among the Jainas is concerned, the above account records the very limited success that he was able to achieve.

Instances of conversion to Buddhism as a result of Buddha's activity among the followers

Buddha and the remainbrāhmanical teachers.

of the remaining four non-brahmanical teachers are wanting in the ing four non- Nikāyas, but that Buddha was not inattentive to recruiting his followers from among the disciples of these teachers appears from the fact that the religious doctrines held by them were criticised in detail by Buddha. Many of the suttas contain such criticisms, which show that there was a movement set afloat by Buddha against the activity of the four teachers viz. Pakudha Kaccāyana, Makkhali Gosāla, Ajitakesakambalī and Purāṇa Kassapa3. These criticisms are often found as side-issues on Buddha's discussions with his own disciples, and with men who used to come to him with the object of getting religious light from him or defeating him in disputation. Abhayarājakumāra, for instance, defined Purāṇa Kassapa's doctrines in course of his conversation with Buddha who had thus an occasion to criticise them. Similarly Ānanda once referred to the classification of beings made by Makkhali Gosāla but Buddha convinced him of the hollowness of such classification.

I Sam. Nik., IV, p. 317.

<sup>2</sup> Majjh. Nik., I, p. 371.

<sup>3</sup> For a detailed treatment of the doctrines of the four teachers, see Dr. Barua's Pre-Buddhistic Indian Philosophy, chs. XVIII, XIX, XX, XXI.

We have so far dealt with the volume and nature of opposition met with by Buddha

Buddha's missionary activities in Magadha. in the different places in Magadha. I am now delineating Buddha's activities in Magadha in connection with the propagation of his religion as recorded in the Buddhist scriptures. The places which have been recorded as the scenes of his religious propaganda in Magadha are Gayā, Uruvela, Rājagaha and its suburbs Nālandā, Pāṭaliputta, Dakkhiṇāgiri, Andhakavinda, and Kallavālamuttagāma.

Bodh-Gaya is in the eye of a Buddhist

I Sam. Nik., V, p. 128.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ang. Nik., III, pp. 383ff; see Dr. Barua, op. cit.

MAGADHA

the most sacred place on the earth, as it was the birth-place of the religion which became almost pan-Asiatic in later Gayā. times. Buddha's missionary work proper was started at Benares a sketch of which has been given elsewhere. It was when he visited Gaya after finishing his first activities at Benares that we find Buddha carrying on his missionary work at this place. Uruvela, a village in the suburb of Gaya, was the stronghold of the Jatilas, order of brāhmanical ascetics. As these ascetics were very difficult to be weaned from the cults in which they had placed implicit faith, it is said that Buddha was put to the necessity of exhibiting miraculous powers to soften their minds in his favour, though he was extremely reluctant to make use of these powers if it could be helped. After preparing his ground in this way, he tried to explain to them the efficacy of following the truth that he had discovered. This explanation shook the foundation of their beliefs to a great extent, though of course, their minds required to be worked up a little further before they could be fully converted1. They accompanied Buddha to Gayāsīsa where he delivered the discourse Adittapariyāyam (Fire Sermon) intended to explain to the Jatilas that the summum bonum which they wanted to attain through fire-worship could be had not through the worship of fire but through the extinction of fires of rāga, dosa, and moha kindled by the action of the sense-organs on the objects of those senses. The Jatilas after hearing this discourse gave up their cults and joined the order initiated by Buddha as bhikkhus. It was with these bhikkhus and the sixty one converts recruited at Benares and its neighbourhood that Buddha created a sensation at Rājagaha where he went next.

I Vinaya, I, pp. 34, 35.

94

On the occasion of Buddha's first visit to Rājagaha in the second year after Enlightenment, he stayed at Latthivana, five miles Rājagaha. from the town. It was here that Bimbisara with his ministers, courtiers, and village-headmen came to meet him. Buddha's youthful appearance led them to think that he was a disciple of the hoary-headed Uruvelakassapa who had been the leader of the Jatilas, and accompanied Buddha to Latthivana. But Uruvelakassapa's homage to Buddha in their presence belied their impression. The youthful Buddha with his sonorous voice explained the first principles of Buddhism, the anicca (transitoriness) and anatta (absence of permanent essence) of the five skand has (constituents of being), and brought home to the mind of the Emperor and his attendants that the religion preached by Buddha had excellences, by virtue of which it could lay claim of superiority to other religions of the time<sup>1</sup>.

The importance of Rajagaha from the point of view of missionary work was very great. It was a great resort of religious teachers and wanderers (paribbājakas) who used to come to the city usually in the company of the traders who supplied them with food and raiment in their journey from distant places. The city was moreover situated at the junction of several trade-routes facilitating communication transit of messages to and from distant places. This made it extremely important for the propagation of the truths that Buddha wanted to preach broadcast. Over and above these, the city provided other advantages, valuable for a religious organizer, viz. of entering into disputations with the religieaux and asserting the superiority of the religion by defeating them; of setting on a sound footing the organization by which the bhikkhus could pursue the ideals, secure from cares for the bare needs of their lives; and of establishing suitable hermitages for the monks in the caves of the surrounding hills so convenient for deep thinking and the pursuit of yoga. The description of the hills with their hermitages requires a little elaboration in view of their importance in the history of the spread of Buddhism. The highest of the hills called the Vultures' Peak (Gijjhakūṭa-pabbata)¹ was a favourite resort of Buddha. In the first few years after Enlightenment, he spent his time frequently at this place with some of his distinguished disciples, viz. Sāriputta, Moggalāna, Mahākassapa, Anuruddha, Punna Mantāniputta, Upāli, Ānanda, and Devadatta, delivering discourses and imparting them necessary training for their spiritual progress and missionary works. To facilitate communication with Buddha and his disciples, Bimbisāra made a road from the foot to the top of the hill2. The peak was the scene of the nefarious attempts of Devadatta supported by Ajātasattu to kill Buddha for not putting him in charge of a body of monks, as he did in regard to Sāriputta and Moggalāna.

I Mahāvastu, III, p 441; Vinaya, I, 22, 1-2; Watters' Yuan Chwang, II, p. 146; Rockhill's Life of the Buddha, pp. 42, 43.

I For its identification, see Arch. Surv. Report, 1905-6; Mr. Cunningham identifies it with Sailagiri (Anc. Geo. p. 466).

<sup>2</sup> Watters' Yuan Chwang, II, p. 151.

MAGADHA

Cave-dwell-Besides the hermitages on the Vultures' Peak, there were ten other abodes of bhikkhus on the hills surrounding Rājagaha¹ viz.,

(1) Corapapāta (the precipice whence robbers were flung to death);

(2) Isigilipasse Kālasīlā (the black rock<sup>2</sup> by the side of the Rṣi-giri )<sup>3</sup>;

(3) Vebhārapasse Sattapanniguhā (where the first Buddhist Synod was held);

(4) Sītavana Sappasondikapabbhāra (the cave situated in a hill infested with snakes

I Dīgh. Nik., II, pp. 116, 263; Vinaya, II, p. 76; see D. N. Sen's Rājagrha in the Buddhist Scriptures in the Report of the Second Oriental Conference, pp. 613-624 and Sites in Rajgir in the J. B. O. R. S., Vol. IV.

2 Watters' Yuan Chwang, II, p. 155. The Chinese pilgrims refer to the cases of religious suicide commited here, said to have been approved by Buddha. Cf. Sam. Nik., III, pp. 119-124; IV, pp. 55-60; V, p 320.

3 The name Rsi-giri was transformed into Isi-gili which was supposed to have been derived from the fact that the hill devoured (gila = to devour) the ascetics i. e. those ascetics who entered it never returned, so congenial the place was to them (Majjh. Nik., III, pp. 68ff.)

98

and near the crematorium called Sītavana which Buddha used to visit with his disciples for passing some time at the place as part of the spiritual training of his disciples. From the nature of this hermitage it would appear that it was specially suited to those monks who took up the sosānika-dhutanga i. e. practising samādhi on a cremation-ground for their spiritual uplift;

(5) Gomata-kandara;

(6) Tinduka (the cave deriving its name from the Tinduka trees 'Diospyrus Embryope-tris');

(7) Tapoda-kandara (Tapoda = hot spring);

(8) Tapodārāma<sup>2</sup>;

(9) Indasālaguhā<sup>3</sup> where Buddha delivered the Sakkapañha-sutta (No. 21) of the  $D\bar{\imath}gha$   $Nik\bar{a}ya$ ;

(10) Pipphali-guhā named after Pipphali mānava, the former name of Mahākassapa who used to stay here4.

1 Divyāvadāna, p. 268.

2 Hot springs still exist there, see Arch. Sur. Rep. 1904-5.

3 Watters' Yuan Chwang, II, p. 173.

4 Manorathapūraņī, I, p. 175; Psalms of the Brethren, p. 363.

These hill hermitages could not provide sufficient accommodation for all the monks staying at Rājagaha. For this reason as also out of love for solitude, many monks dwelt in arañña-kūṭikas (leafsheds) in the jungles on the hills¹. Dabba sheds) in the jungles on the hills. Dabba Mallaputta was entrusted with the charge of grouping the monks according to their subjects of study or methods of spiritual discipline, and of allotting to them suitable residences.

Though Buddha accepted the Veluvana Kalandakanivāpa<sup>2</sup> from Bimbisāra and resided there very often, the Vinaya rules did not yet allow the monks to have any residences specially made for them by the laity. A setthi of Rājagaha felt for this inconvenience of the Buddhist monks and enquired whether it would be objectionable to them if he built monasteries (vihāras) for their use. He was told that up till now the monks had not been permitted by Buddha to have such vihāras. They had to dwell in "the woods, at the foot of trees, on hill-sides in grottoes, in mountain caves, in cemetries,

Majjh. Nik., III, p. 217; Jātakas, III, pp. 33, 71;
 V. p. 176.

<sup>2</sup> For a description of the Veluvana monastery, see Mr. D. N. Sen, op. cit.

in forests, in open plains, and in heaps of straw' (arañña, rukkhamūla, pabbata, kandara, giriguhā susāna, vanapattha, ajjhokāsa, and palālapuñja)¹. This question raised by the query of the setthi was put up before Buddha, who thenceforward permitted the monks to use with some restrictions five sorts of residences viz. vihāra, addhayoga, pāsāda, hammiya, guhā (monastery, cottage, storied dwelling, attics, cave)². When Buddha allowed the monks to live in vihāras given by the lay-devotees, the latter commenced building them in large numbers.

Notable vihāras given by the laity.

building them in large numbers.

Three such vihāras in the suburbs of Rājagaha are often mentioned in the Buddhist scriptures viz.,

Veluvana. Jīvaka-ambayana, and Maddakucchi migadāya. The first vihāra was presented by Bimbisāra on the occasion of Buddha's first entrance into Rājagaha, the second by Jīvaka in the twentieth vassa of Buddha's ministry, and the third very probably by a Madda prince when Mahākappina was ordained as a monk<sup>3</sup>.

I S. B. E., XX, p. 157; Vinaya, II, p. 146.

<sup>2</sup> S. B. E., XIII, pp. 173, 174 and fn.; Vinaya, II, p. 146.

<sup>3</sup> Mahākappina's wife was a Madda princess,

Buddha's followers at the time of his visit to Rājagaha were the five brāhmaṇa ascetics converted at Sārnāth, Yasa with his fifty four companions, the thirty Bhaddavaggiya youths and three Kassapa brothers with their band of Jațilas. After enlisting Bimbisāra and his gāmaṇīs and courtiers as lay-devotees and fixing Veluvana for his own residence, Buddha made attempts to carry on further his misionary work.

Buddh's attempts at conversion of paribbāja-kas and the members of the religious orders.

Sāriputta and Moggalāna were the first to be converted at Rājagaha with their companions the two hundred and fifty disciples of Sañjaya. Sāriputta had already made a good deal of progress in spiritual culture and took only a fortnight to reach arahathood. This stage was attained at the time when Buddha was delivering a discourse at Sukarakhatalena in Gijjhakūṭa on the three vedanās, their origin, and destruction for the benefit of Dīghanakha paribbājaka, a relative of Sāriputta, who was fanning Buddha on the occasion¹. Moggalāna who went to Kallavālasee Vinaya, I, p. 105; Burlingame's Buddhist Legends, II, pp. 169-176.

I The sutta is named 'Dīghanakha Suttantam' in the Majjh, Nik., I, p. 501 and 'Vedanāpariggaha muttagama for practising meditation of the elements (dhātukammatthānam) fell into sloth and torpor on the seventh day after his ordination; but admonished by Buddha, he became diligent and attained the perfection of knowledge1. After the conversion of Sanjaya's followers, Buddha frequently visited the various halls (kutūhalasālās) and the abodes of Wanderers (paribbājakārāmas) and non-brāhmanical teachers of Rājagaha with a view to convince them of the efficacy of his religion by discussions. The discourses that were delivered at Rajagaha dealt mainly with the various doctrines of the paribbājakas and religious teachers, because Buddha had at this time to lay bare the weak points of their faiths and vindicate the strength of his own doctrines. succeeded on many occasions to win over to his side as lay-disciples many followers of other sects but he could not add much to the number of his bhikkhus. As for instance, the paribbājakas Vacchagotta, Dīghanakha, Sakulūdāyi, and Acela

Suttantam' in the commentary of Buddhaghosa (Burlingame's Buddhist Legends, I, p. 203) because the first part treats of the tenets of Dighanakha and the last part of the Vedanās.

1 Manorathapurani, I, p. 161; Ang, Nik., IV, p. 85.

Kassapa took life-long sarana in Buddha, Dhamma, and Sangha but did not become bhik-khus.

Buddha utilized the opportunity of meeting the large number of emissaries sent to him in batches by his father Suddhodana for taking him

Buddha's flying visit to Kapila-vastu and the converts made.

to Kapilavatthu by converting them to Buddhism. Sakulūdāyi, a playmate of Buddha was the head of the last batch of the emissaries. After conversion he was able to persuade Buddha to pay a visit to Kapila-vatthu. The story of what Buddha did at this place forms the subject-matter of the next section. This much I should mention here that some of the converts, joining his order now, played shortly after an important part in the work of propagation of Buddhism and became in later times very prominent figures in the history of the religion. They were Anuruddha, Ānanda, Upāli, and Rāhula. Less prominent were Buddha's cousin Nanda, Bhaddiya, Bhagu, and Kimbila. Devadatta who joined the order along with others became prominent by his opposition to Buddhism rather than by helping it.

During the periods of Buddha's residence at Rajagaha throughout his career, Buddha used to keep himself busy with the training of the bhik-

SPREAD OF BUDDHISM

khus. He constantly watched their conduct and their mode of performance of spiritual practices;

Buddha's industry for training up his disciples.

104

inclucating upon them at the same time the essential principles of Buddhism. The discourses in the Nikā-yas show clearly how Buddha studied their character and predilections, and corrected their weaknesses by suitable advice, admonitions and courses of disciplinary practices. In the Rāhulovādasutta, for instance, Buddha instructed Rāhula how kāyakamma, (deed), vacikamma (word), and manokamma (thought) could be kept pure by paccavekkhana (examination and introspection) because he had seen that Rāhula was not sufficiently controlled. When, however, the disciple made some progress in self-control, he led him up to realise gradually the anicca (want of permanent essence) and dukkha-bhāva (miseries inherent in the nature) of all worldly things and that the four dhātus or five skandhas collectively or separately do not constitute the attā (ego)1. Nanda, another of his disciples, could not check his anxieties for food and raiment, for which he used to be taken to task by the Teacher. In due course the check put upon him Buddha's helped him to control his senses so cousin Nanda. much that he has been praised in the Anguttara Nikāya as the chief of those who have control over their senses (indrivesu guttadvārānam aggo)1. To cite another instance, Anuruddha could not, owing to slackness attain cittavimutti (emancipation) of exertion. though he had advanced much Anuruddha. through his diligence in the path of meditation whereby he attained dibbacakkhu (the divine eye). This slackness which was clogging his way was removed by Buddha's guidance supplemented by the personal care taken of Anuruddha by Sāriputta2.

I Ang Nik., II, pp. 164-5; Sam. Nik., III, p. 136; IV, pp. 105-7; Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 414ff; III, pp. 277-80.

The weakness of Kimbila lay similarly in his inability to muster up sufficient mental concentration through in-breathing and out-breathing.

This was detected by Buddha and removed by his advice with special reference to the processes which he could not practise in a perfect way<sup>3</sup>.

Sam. Nik., II, p. 281; Ang. Nik., I, p. 25; IV,
 p. 166.

<sup>2</sup> Ang. Nik., I, p. 282; IV, pp. 228ff.

<sup>3</sup> Sam. Nik., V, pp. 322-325.

SPREAD OF BUDDHISM

106

The case of Ananda is interesting. In spite of his insatiable love of knowledge by which he rose to be the chief of the bahussutas (the learned), and in spite of the great care that was bestowed upon him by Ānanda. Buddha for his spiritual culture, he could not attain arahathood until after the death of Buddha, the reason being that he could not divest himself of his great attachment to Buddha, not as the founder of a religion but as a master to whom he was related as a servitor. This attachment had the element which proved a clog to his practice of the doctrine of detachment from the world, the corner-stone of Buddha's teachings. Buddha used to admonish Ananda for his inability to get rid of this attachment because therein lay the cause of his failure to attain the state of mind required for arahathood; and in the Mahāparinibbāna Sutta we find Buddha expostulating with the disciple for shedding tears when Buddha expressed his desire to leave this world1. So long as Buddha lived, Ananda could not rise above the stage of bahussuta with his inordinate desire for knowledge as evidenced by the frequent questions that are recorded to have been put by him to Buddha about Dīgh. Nik., II, pp. 142-144.

MAGADHA

the correctness of Purāṇa Kassapa's divisions of mankind, Sariputta's exposition of the origin of dukkha (suffering) from phassa (contact), the theory of causation (paticcasamuppāda), the sense of the terms nirodha, loka, suñña, vedanā, iddhi, ānāpānasati and so forth1. The training imparted to Devadatta by Buddha was on lines that were calculated as suitable to his peculiar mental tendencies. Devadatta. This disciple made some progress in yoga attaining ability to perform some miracles. Buddha detected his predilection for gain and fame through the exercise of his power to perform miracles by which he had won over Ajātasattu to become his patron; and with the view of removing this love of gain and fame, he gave him advice and delivered to him discourses calculated to remove this weakness; but deep-rooted had been this tendency that he continued on his way to ruin, turning deaf ear to his master's warnings2. The instances can be multiplied but those that have been cited are enough to show how the great teacher used to see through the mental composition of the disciples whom he had occasion to train personally, reading their tendencies and mental weaknesses as clearly as if they were reflected on a mirror. This accounts for his great success as a spiritual trainer. His superhuman insight enabled him to spot the deficiency of his followers, and to suggest the remedy that could remove it. He was a master of this art and could play on the mental gamut of his disciples perfectly, creating spiritual symphony by striking on the right chords of their minds and enchanting them by the music thus produced.

<sup>1</sup> Ang. Nik., III, pp. 383ff; Sam. Nik., II, pp. 34-37; VI, p. 167.

<sup>2</sup> Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 192ff.; Vinaya. MV, VII. 2ff.

108

Shortly after his arrival at Rājagaha, Buddha felt the necessity of framing rules by which the conduct of the bhikkhus could be directed

Buddha felt the necessity of framing Vinaya rules. on right lines and the organization constituted by them worked smoothly but vigorously for the fulfilment of the ideals that the new religion held before the bhik-

khus. Though at the outset he himself was watching and guiding the conduct of his disciples, he saw that as the number of bhikkhus was growing gradually and was not confined to a particular locality, it was necessary that he should frame a body of rules that would gradually dispense with his personal watch and ward. Moreover, as he was founding a religious organization which was intended to work long after his own span of life on the earth, it ought to be made in such a way that it might be self-sufficing, meeting its own exigencies in any addition to making full provision for the performance of the daily duties that are required of its members. But though he felt the necessity of framing rules that could meet completely the requirements of his religious organization with its branches, he saw that it was not possible to frame them all at once, because the whole set of rules could not be evolved without having experience of the deficiencies of the organization and the faults of commission and omission committed by the bhikkhus. The factor that accelerated the framing of the rules was the fact that his disciples were at times deviating from the line of conduct that the popular opinion of the time generally laid down for the monks e.g. want of moderation in eating, impropriety in dressing, and the like. Any case for which no rule was in existence had to be handled on its merits and a rule had to be framed. The existence of the rules could prove to be a check upon the monks' conduct, as otherwise they enjoyed absolute latitude in the fields of action free that were without any restraint. The Vinaya rules evolved gradually by the occurrence of new incidents or the commission of new offences. Many of the rules, of course, were laid down on the model of those already current in the religious orders of the day, e.g. the holding of There are others also that were uposathas. framed, pursuant to the mentality of the people at large, while there were others again prescribed in compliance with the requirements of the state. As an instance of the former may be cited the prohibition of a prolonged stay of a bhikkhu at a particular place1 and the prescription of the rule for passing vassa and holding pavāraņā at a particular locality2, while examples of the latter will be found in the rule that soldiers and convicts must not be allowed to join the order. It took a long time, of course, for the set of rules to be evolved in its complete-A good deal of care was taken to make the code of conduct as perfect as possible, and that Buddha succeeded in achieving this object is apparent from the smooth working of the code for centuries. The basal frame-work of the code which was made at Rajagaha served to check the delinquencies on the part of the bhikkhus against which Buddha on many occasions gave this warning: "These will not conduce, O Bhikkhus, to the conversion of the unconverted and to the augmentation of the number of the converted; but they will result, O Bhikkhus, in the unconverted being repulsed from the faith, and in many of the converted becoming estranged." I mention below the Vinaya rules framed at Rājagaha along with references to the circumstances which necessitated or suggested the framing of the rules<sup>2</sup>:—

I Vinaya., MV., I, 53,

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., MV., III, 4, 3.

(A) Re. Initiation.—Difficulties arose by the delegation of the power of initiation to the disciples, as there took place cases of either indiscriminate initiation or refusal to initiate deserving persons. To avoid these difficulties, the power was vested in a panel of ten monks (1.31), and the procedure for ordaining a person was as far as possible laid down in details. The rules are in the main the following,—

(1) The practice of giving ordination by the trisarana formula was abrogated and the form of natti catutthena kammena upasampādetabbam (conferring ordination by three proclamations) was introduced (I. 28).

I S. B. E., XVII, pp. 18, 19.

<sup>2</sup> The references that have henceforth been put in the body are from Vinaya, Mahāvagga.

- (2) No one should be ordained unless he seeks it (1.19); and if a heretic excepting a Jatila or a Sākyan seeks ordination, he should pass through a probationary (parivāsa) period of four months (1.38), as there had been cases of heretics joining the order but giving it up shortly after. They used to speak ill of the dhamma as they were ignorant of its essence.
- (3) Ordination should not be given to persons suffering from five kinds of diseases (1. 39), to men in royal service, criminals proclaimed or punished, debtors, and slaves (1. 40).
- (4) The person to be ordained must have a upajjhāya and an ācariya. The reason for laying down this rule was that the untrained, though ordained, bhikkhus incurred the displeasure of the laity by their shabby clothing, want of moderation in their meals, want of refinement in manners etc. The initiated bhikkhu had to undergo a period of training under the upajihāya or ācariya, who should be a bhikkhu

I Regarding the distinction between upajjhāya and ācariya, see S.B.E., XIII, pp. 178, 179 fn.; Mr. S.K. Dutt in his Early Buddhist Monachism, pp. 180, 181 says "the Ācariya was the actual instructor and the Upajjhāya, who was formally elected at the upasampadā, was instructor only in name. The latter, however, of ten years' standing. Elaborate rules were made regarding the mutual duties and obligations of the student and the teacher, and the checks for non-compliance with them, the qualifications of a teacher, the period for which the student should live with the teacher, the reasons for the cessation of the relationship between the the student and the teacher and so forth (1. 25; I. 31; I. 32; I. 35-37; I. 53).

- (5) Restriction of age. Ordination was once given to some boys of tender age who had not the capacity to know what the life of a bhikkhu means. Hence the rule was made that persons by w twenty years should not be given upasampadā (higher ordination) while those below fifteen should not be given pabbajjā (I. 49, 50).
- at the time of the ordination. Though the bhikkhus took the vow of poverty, some of them took advantage of the devotion and charity of the laity to pass an easy life. This led to the laying down of the rule that every person when admitted into the order should be told that he must live on the morsels of food enjoyed a higher status. There was, however, absolutely no difference between the duties and obligations of an Ācariya and those of a Upajjhāya" received by begging, clothe himself in robes made of sewn rags, dwell at arañña, rukkhamūla, vanapattha, etc. and take (gomutra) decomposing urine of cows as medicine1. The severity of the rule scared away intending converts; therefore a relaxation of the rule had to be introduced. The bhikkhus were permitted to accept invitations to the houses of the laity and receive food and raiment offered by them. Through the efforts of Jīvaka, the bhikkhus were allowed to use robes of six kinds of stuff besides the pamsukūla (viii. 3). Five other kinds of residences were sanctioned in addition to those mentioned above to diminish endured by the bhikkhus. the hardships These five were vihāra, addhayoga, hammiya, quhā, and pāsāda. The acceptance of the vihāras constructed by the setthis of Rajagaha was sanctioned by Buddha at the earnest request of the setthis. This however led to some abuses, as the undisciplined of the bhikkhus gave themselves up to luxuries and teased the people by asking them for contributions for constructing the aramas or supplying their luxuries. A large number of restrictions had therefore to be appended to the rule e. g. prohibiting the bhikkhus to ask the people for vihāras and diminishing the size of the buildings to limited dimensions to etc. The rule regarding medicine was also relaxed to some extent, allowing bhikkhus to use ghee, butter, oil, honey, molasses etc. as medicines. (vi. 15, 17, 26).

114

I Vinaya, MV., I, 30.

(B). Re. Uposatha and Pātimokkha assemblies¹.—It was Bimbisāra who brought to Buddha's notice that the institution of holding uposathas (i. e. assemblies for religious discussions held thrice fortnightly), prevalent in some of the religious orders of the time, was very useful and requested Buddha to incorporate it in the Buddhist code of Vinaya. These assemblies developed in course of time an offshoot in the Pātimokkha gatherings where the monks confessed their offences of omission or commission as expiation for them. The Pātimokkha assemblies gave rise to some serious difficulties which were obviated by the framing of rules under the following heads:—

(1) Defining  $(s\bar{\imath}m\bar{a})$  the limits of jurisdiction of parishes (II, 5-6; II, 12.7).

(2) Selection of the President of the Pātimokkha assembly (uposathapamukha).

I See Sanghādisesa VI, in Vinaya, III pp. 144ff. and Cullavagga, VI for detailed rules re. dwellings and furniture.

SPREAD OF BUDDHISM

(3) Selection of a person to answer questions on Dhamma and Vinaya (II, 15, 5-6; 16).

(4) Uposatha Hall and its requisites (11, 20).

(5) Persons not allowed to attend the  $P\bar{a}ti$ mokkha assemblies (II, 36).

(6) Confessions by sick and absentee bhik-khus (II, 22, 24).

116

(7) Procedure for convening a Pātimokkha assembly (II, 3, 19).

- (C). Re. Vassavāsa. The practice of spending the rainy season at a particular place was current among the ascetics of various religious orders. This was adopted by Buddha. Either the day after the full-moon of Āṣāḍha or the day after a month from it was fixed as the day of commencing vassavāsa (III, 1-2).
- (D). Re. Use of Foot-wear. Buddha per mitted the use of foot-wear in view of the great hardship suffered by the bhikkhu Sona Kolivisa on account of the delicate skin of his feet, by a few monks who had boils in their feet, and by a few other bhikkhus for having had to walk with bare feet on soil full of gravels in places like Avanti. The use of foot-wear generally by all monks was allowed later on to remove the inconvenience in walking long distances, though many restrictions as to the nature of the foot-wear had to be laid down (v, 1ff.).

Lastly, at Rājagaha a few rules for settling disputes (cv., iv, 4-10) and elaborate rules for the guidance of monks in their daily life (cv., v) were laid down. Of the Pātimokkha rules, twenty one were framed at Rājagaha, viz. under Pārājikā one, Sanghādisesa six, Nissaggiya Pācittiya three, Pācittiya ten and Pāṭidesanīya one.

In the fifth vassa, Buddha was invited by the people of Vesāli to visit the place for Preparation at Rājagaha for missionary work at Vesāli and Sāvatthi. removing the pestilence ravaging the city. Buddha in response to the invitation visited the place and stayed there for a short time. The end of the pestilence synchronized with his stay there and was believed to have been due to the beneficent power of the Teacher who made efforts to drive away the epidemic by uttering the Ratana Sutta. The incident went far to prepare the minds of the people to follow the lead of the wonder-worker in the religion. Buddha visited Vesāli in the fifth vassa and many times subsequently and succeeded in having a large number of converts.

I Paṇḍit Vidhuśekhara Śāstri's Pātimokkha, pp. 378ff; Vinaya, V, pp. 144ff.

During the second vassa when Buddha was residing at Sītavana at Rājagaha, Anāthapindika, the Lord High Treasurer of Kosala came to see Buddha, and was converted to Buddhism. He invited the teacher to Sāvatthi to spend there his vassa; this marked the commencement of the spread of Buddhism in Kosala, details of which will be given in the following section.

In the early years of Buddha's career the was not so attentive to the formation of a society of lay-devotees, as to the order of

Lay-devotees indispensable for a religious order. Buddha's attention to same, monks, but he soon realized that a religious organization composed of bhikkhus needed a lay-society for its upkeep. The simple formula of trisarana which he had originally prescribed for utterance by his lay-devotees as a mark of their devotion to

Buddhism was not regarded by them as adequate to bind them up closely with the Buddhist order; hence Buddha in course of time prescribed that every lay-devotee of his should observe the five precepts, and the more advanced among them the eight precepts on the six uposatha days and hear the religious discussions and discourses held at the assemblies of the sanghas. The topics that formed the subjectmatter of his discourses meant for the laydevotees were the merits of dana and saddha, the four truths, mental discipline etc. of the lay-Buddhist society growth imperceptible in its first stages but gradually became sufficiently noticeable not only by the number but also by the distinguishing marks of the members of the lay society1. The first remarkable enlistment of lay-devotees took place at the time when the chiefs of the eighteen śrenis and other officials of Bimbisara paid their homage to Buddha and became his followers in the second year of Buddha's career, Before this, of course, the conversions of Trapusa and Bhallika at Gayā, and Yasa's father at Benares as lay-devotees had been effected; but then the mere utterance of the formula indicating the taking of refuge in Buddha, Dhamma, and Sangha was the mark of their belonging to the Buddhist lay-society. The lay-society of Rajagaha gradually attained larger dimensions, so much so that the Buddhist bhikkhus swelling in number could be easily maintained by the supply of the bare necessaries of life by the lay-society. A few names of lay-devotees preserved to us in connection with the discourses in the Nikāyas may be given here to show the classes of people who joined the Buddhist order as lay-devotees during the periods of Buddha's missionary work at Rājagaha:

I See Dr. N. Law's Historical Miscellany, pp. 95ff.

I. The gāmaņīs—Talapuṭa naṭagāmaṇī (Saṃ. iv, p. 306)¹; Yodhājīvagāmaṇī (Saṃ. iv, p. 308); Assāroha gāmaṇi (Saṃ. iv, p. 310); Maṇicūlaka gāmaṇi (Saṃ. iv, p. 325); Rāsiya gāmaṇi (Saṃ. iv, p. 340); etc.

- 2. The gahapatis—Jotikā (Sam. v. p. 344); Mānadinna (Sam. v, p. 178.) Sirivaddha (Sam. v, pp. 176-7), Sona gahapatiputta (Sam. IV, p. 113); Dārukammika gahapati of Nādika (Ang. iii, p. 391); Belatha Kaccāna, a sugar merchant of Andhakavinda (Vin. I, p. 224); Pukkusāti kulaputta (Majjh. iii, p. 237); Dighāvu upāsaka (Sam. v. p. 344); Jīvaka; Anāthapindika and his setthi friend; etc.
- 3. Jaina disciples of Nālandā—Asibandhakaputta gāmaņī, Upāli, Abhayarājakumāra (see ante, p. 90.).

4. Brāhmaṇas—Kasibharadvāja brāhmaṇa of Ekanālā; Dhanañjana brāhmaṇa (Sam. I, p. 160); etc.

- 5. Ladies—Sāri brāhmanī and paribbājikā, mother of Sāriputta of Nālakagāma; Dhanañjanī a brāhmanī (Sam. i, p. 160); Velukanṭakī Nandamātā of Dakkhinā-girī (Ang. iv, p. 63); Cundī rājakumārī (Ang. iii, p. 35); etc.
  - 6. Kings-Bimbisāra, Ajātasattu.
  - I Later on he became a bhikkhu (see Psalms of the Brethren, p. 369)

7. Paribbājakas—Vacchagotta (Majjh. 1, p. 489); Sakuludāyi (Majjh. 11, p. 1); etc.

Of course no inference can be drawn from the above list as to the number of people who became lay-devotees of Buddha, because the list is only fragmentary and far from being exhaustive. The largest amount of support came from the rich setthis, some of whom have been mentioned above. So far as Rājagaha was concerned, I do not think it would be erroneous to state that the largest number of converts was supplied by the vaisya community. This inference draws its support from the fact that eighteen śrenis visiting Buddha with Bimbisāra were all of the vaisya community, each of the srenis consisting of a large number of individuals. The list of the eighteen śrenis is found in the Mahāvastu1, from which it appears that the crafts and industries constituting the professions of the srenis covered a large range, showing that they fairly represented the various branches of the vaisya community. The Nikāyas bristle with instances of setthis lending their whole-hearted support by men and money to the Buddhist sangha. We shall have occasion to mention them as we deal with the various localities to which they belonged.

I. Mahavastu, III, p. 44.

The interview between Buddha and Anatha pindika was brought about by a rich setthi relation of the latter a resident of Rajagaha1; and it was through this relation of Anathapindika that the other rich setthis of Rajagaha became disciples of Buddha.2 A great emporium as Rajagaha was, it was natural that Buddha should have a large number of followers from among the local merchants. They could on account of their wealth make munificent gifts to the Buddhist sangha providing the bhikkhus with boarding and lodging; for instance, it was at the offer of an ārāma by a setthi, who was moved by the hardships of the monks as to shelter, that Buddha allowed the monks to live in the aramas; and at the offer of a sugar-merchant to supply the monks with sugar that Buddha permitted the use of sugar by the bhikkhus. It was on account of the active interest taken by them in the progress of Buddhism that names of many of them have been recorded in the Buddhist scriptures.

In the closing years of Buddha's life in Magadha took place two notable conver-

I Vinaya, II, pp. 154-5.

<sup>2</sup> Hardy's Manual of Buddhism. p. 216.

sions viz., of Ajātasattu and Jīvaka. Ajātasattu

Buddha's activities in Magadha towards the end of his career.

became king in the 72nd year of Buddha's life and continued his patronage to Devadatta who with Kokālika, Kaṭamoratissaka, Khaṇḍadeviyāputta Samuddadatta and Thullanandā bhikkhuni¹ as the foremost disciples started a sect intended to be a rival to Buddhism. The cause of his influence with a few people is attributed to his power of working miracles attained through ihana under the direction of Buddha at Sukarakhata in Gijihakuta2. He collected about 500 disciples and established a centre at Gayasisa where a monastery was built for him by Ajātasattu3. A point of difference between the religious doctrines preached by him and those by Buddha lay in the bias to rigorous life that appealed so much to the people at large, but which Buddha left to the option of his disciples for adopting or rejecting it. Ajātasattu, who was used as a tool by Devadatta for the execution of his purposes, felt remorse when he was advanced in age for helping Devadatta in his evil designs as he gradually became impressed with the decided superiority of Buddha to Devadatta in all directions. Jīvaka, who about this time returned to Rājagaha after completing his medical education at Takkhasīlā and became so eminent a phycian that his services were eagerly requisitioned by the ruling princes, volunteered his services for the medical treatment of Buddha and his dissiciples and professed his firm faith in Buddhism. He was a medical adviser of Ajātasattu and thereby got opportunities of bringing home to his mind the greatness of Buddha and his teachings. The introduction to the Sāmañnaphala Sutta relates how he brought about the interview between Buddha and the king, on which occasion the latter was converted by Buddha by means of a discourse on the secular and spiritual merits acquired by a bhikkhu by his joining the order. This conversion took place in the 79th year of Buddha's life i. e. just a year before his parinibbana.

I Vinaya, III, p. 171; IV, pp. 66, 335.

<sup>2</sup> Watters' Yuan Chwang, II, p. 10 refers to it as 'Devadatta Samādhi cave.'

<sup>3</sup> Jātaka, I, pp. 67, 319.

While staying at Rājagaha, Buddha used to visit other places within Magadha with his bands

Other countries in Magadha.

of disciples. Only the places which rose into prominence by reason of establishment of monasteries and large number of adherents there have been recorded in the Nikāyas. They are :-

- Nālandā-It was then a small but a 7. prosperous village situated at a distance of a yojana from Rājagaha1. The usual residence of the monks was at the monastery Pāvārikaambavana. There was another monastery midway between Rajagaha and Nalanda called Ambalatthikā where Rāhula stayed at times.2 From the nature of the discourses delivered there and from the particulars of the persons with whom Buddha entered into disputations, it appears that Nigantha Nātaputta had there a firm footing<sup>3</sup>. Most of the discourses were intended to refute the doctrines of the Jaina faith, while the learned disputants, viz, Dīghatapassī, Upāli, Abhayrājakumāra, and Asibandhakaputta gāmaņī were the followers of Nigantha Nataputta, all of whom were converted by Buddha except the one named first. From the Bhagavatī Sūtra also, we learn that Nālandā was the meeting place of Mahāvīra with Gosala.
  - I Sum. Vil., p. 35; Majjh. Nik., I, p. 377; Dīgh. Nik., I, Sutta II. It is stated in Yuan Chwang's Records and Mahāvastu that Nālandā was the birth-place of Sāriputta, but in fact his birth-place was Nālaka which was an unimportant village near Nālandā.
    - 2 Majjh. Nik., I, p. 414.
  - 3 Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 379, 392ff; Sam. Nik., IV, pp. 110, 317, 323; Mahāvastu, III, p. 56.

2. Pāṭaliputta—During Buddha's life-time, it was only a village called Pāṭaligāma which Buddha visited with his disciples in the last days of his life. The laity of the place invited Buddha and his disciples who on their arrival at the place were accommodated in a rest house probably known later on as the Kukkuṭa-ārāma. It was at this time that Sunīdha and Vassakāra two ministers of Ajātasattu were fortifying Pāṭaligāma as a defence against the Vajjians. This fortified village afterwards rose to be Pāţaliputta, the capital of Magadha and a great emporium1. Out of respect for Buddha, the two ministers named the gate through which Buddha passed and the ferry ghat whence he departed as Gotama-dvāra and Gotama-tittha. Near Pāṭaliputta, there were two villages called Koțigama and Nādika where Buddha stopped in his last journey. It was at Koțigama that Ambapali came to invite Buddha to Vesāli2. Buddha passed from Kotigāma to Nādika where he had many faithful monks and nuns and male and female lay-devotees, some of whom died before his visit to the place<sup>3</sup>, hence the

<sup>1</sup> Vinaya, MV., VI, p. 28; Dīgh. Nik., II, p. 85.

<sup>2</sup> Vinaya, I, p. 231.

<sup>3</sup> Dīgh. Nik., II, pp. 91-92.

445143214

discourses that he delivered here were all concerning the Marana-sati1.

- 3. Dakkhiṇāgiri—In the 11th year of Buddha's ministration, he visited the brāhmaṇa village Ekanālā and converted the two brāhmaṇas Kasi-Bharadvāja² and Sampūrṇa³. A distinguished female lay-devotee Velukaṇṭakī Nandamātā lived here⁴. It was at this place that Buddha formed his idea of the way in which the cīvaras (robes of the bhikkhus) should be made out of pieces of cloth stitched together like the rectangular pieces of land tilled by different persons in the rice-fields near the village.
- 4. & 5. Andhakavinda and Kallavālamuttagāma, two other villages near Rājagaha, though not so well-known had monasteries where Buddha stayed at times. At Andhakavinda we find him instructing some newly ordained bhikkhus and converting Belattha Kaccāna, a sugar-merchant of the place. Mahākassapa while here had once to ford a stream to attend a Pātimokkha assembly at Rājagaha. After this incident the Vinaya rule was ins-

I Ang. Nik., III, pp. 303ff; 391.

<sup>2</sup> Sutta Nipāta., pp. 12ff; Sam. Nik., I, pp. 172-3.

<sup>3</sup> R. L. Mitra's Nepalese Buddhist Literature. p. 18.

<sup>4</sup> Ang. Nik., IV, pp. 63ff.

SPREAD OF BUDDHISM

tituted that a bhikkhu need not cross a stream, as wherever it exists, it should be made a boundary of the jurisdiction of a monastery. Kallavalamutta-gama is important on account of its association with Moggalana who underwent there his first course of training.

128

IV

Kosala

The kingdom of Kosala is next in importance to Magadha in the history of the spread of It was at Sāvatthi, the capital of Buddhism. Kosala, that Buddha spent almost the half of his career as a teacher1, Importance of Kosala. delivered the largest number of discourses and framed the largest number of Pātimokkha rules2; and it was here that the religion, which had passed its infancy Magadha, developed into its full stature found in the Nikāyas. Though according to Dr. Oldenberg<sup>3</sup>, Kosala was outside the limits within which orthodox brahmanism prevailed, the territory was in fact within the said limits containing, as mentioned in the Nikāyas, many brāhmaņa settlements. Dr. Oldenberg bases his opinion on two passages, one of the Cullavagga (xII. 2, 3) viz., "Buddhas are born in the puratthima janapadas", and the other of the Majjhima

I J.R.A.S., 1891, p. 339; Hardy's Manual, p. 356.

<sup>2</sup> Vinaya, V, pp. 144-5.

Oldenberg's Buddha, Appendix, I.

Nikāya (II, p 124) refering to Buddha as a Kosalaka. The word puratthina however does not imply prācya-deśa. The passage contemplates only Kapilavatthu lying on the northern extremity of Kosala and not the whole of the territory; and moreover both the town and the territory lay on the west of Sadānīrā, an early limit of Aryan colonization as mentioned in the Satapatha-Brāhmaṇa1. Hence, as a citizen of Kapilavatthu, Buddha could well be called a Kosalaka, though for the matter of that he was not an inhabitant of prācya-deśa. We therefore find that at the time of the rise of Buddhism, Kosala was a brāhmanical country, where the progress of the religion was not without The tracing of progress in its difficulties. the propagation of the faith in the kingdom is interesting in view of the above fact as well as for its inclusion of the home of the Sākya clan, to which the Teacher had belonged. Though Kosala was a brāhmaṇical territory, it did not deter

Buddha from making attempts to spread his religion there from the very commencement of his career as a preacher. The first attempt was made at the time of his stay at Benares through the first band of Buddhist missionaries, among whom figured the five inhabitants of Kapilavatthu and its precincts, namely the first five brahmana converts of the Teacher1. The second attempt was made by Buddha personally. While at Rājagaha, he was repeatedly invited by Suddhodana and at last induced by Buddha's play-mate Udāyi to go to the place. During his short stay at the town on this occasion, he succeeded in converting some of the Sakyan youths to his The third and the most successful attempt was made at the time when he visited Savatthi at the request of Anathapindika, who presented to the Teacher the Jetavana-ārāma distinguished in later times as a great resort of bhikkhus, and placed at his disposal all the influence that he could command for the propagation of Buddhism in Kosala.

I Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, I, 4. I quoted also in Oldenberg's Buddha, pp. 398, 399.

1 Mahāvastu, III, p. 420; Psalms of the Brethren, p. 284. According to the Buddhist legends, the thirty Bhaddavaggiya youths, converted by Buddha on his way from Benares to Uruvela, also belonged to Kosala (Hardy's Manual of Buddhism, p. 188). Buddhaghosa says that the Bhaddavaggiya youths were brothers of the king of Kosala. They after their ordination lived at Pātheyya, a country situated to the west of Kosala (S. B. E. XVII, p. 146fn.)

132

Inspite of the efforts of Anāthapindika to give Buddhism a footing at Savatthi, the heads of the local sects resented the intrusion of a new religion into the field which Opposition they considered as their monopoly. encountered by Buddha expected to meet a stub-Buddhism born opposition from the leaders of in Kosala. the sects, and to ward it off, he had sent to Sāvatthi his ablest lieutenant Sāriputta entrusted with the ostensible work of supervising the Sāriputta construction of the Jetavana vihāra. was a past master in the art of disputation and had deep knowledge of the brahmanic lore as well as that of the non-brahmanic sects. He had to enter into disputation with many teachers, all of whom he was able to silence by dint of his able exposition of the Dhamma1. A ground was thus prepared for the advent of Buddhism at the time of Buddha's arrival at the place. In addition to the opposition from the local teachers the disciples of the six non-brahmanic teachers were also at Sāvatthi to render thorny the path of These people Buddha's progress in his mission. as also king Pasenadi were great admirers of these teachers and used to speak fof them as distinguished teachers of schools and heads of orders, and revered by the wise (sanghino ganino ganācariyā nātā yasassino titthakarā sādhusammatā) while of Buddha as young in age and fresh as a recluse (daharo ceva jātiyā navo Savatthi, according to ca pabbajjāyāti)1. the Uvāsagadasao, was the head-quarters of the Ajīvika sect which held its founder Makkhali Gosāla in very high respect2. The influence established by this as well as the other five teachers was long standing, honours and largesses used to be heaped upon them by the local people. These teachers were not agreeable to give in an inch of ground to the new preacher who in their eyes was but a callow youth, yet a long way off from the winning of his laurels. They therefore tried every means to dissuade the people from listening to his preachings. All his teachings, they said, were but reflexions of what they taught3. They made a combined effort to oust him from Kosala by persuading Pasenadi to hold a competition in the exhibition of their miraculous powers. Buddha defeated them all in this competition and thereby established his reputation as a great religious seer. The name and influence of the six teachers began to wane after this event, while those of Buddha increased. Out of envy, they, it is said, went to the length of making the futile attempt of blackening Buddha's character by setting him two courtezans Ciñcā and Sundarī<sup>1</sup>. Buddha laid bare before the public the weak points in their doctrines and thus gradually sapped the foundation of their influence in the place. During this period, Buddha at times instructed his disciples in the ways in which to meet the arguments advanced by their opponents of the six non-brahmanical sects and trained them to make clear expositions of the rational principles on which Buddhism is based2.

Watters' Yuan Chwang, I, pp. 384, 394.

I Sam. Nik., I, p. 68; Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 205, 400, 426.

<sup>2</sup> Dr. Barua, op. cit., pp. 298, 299, 300.

<sup>3</sup> Majih. Nik., I, p. 84.

The opposition put forth by the six teachers and their disciples to the progress

Buddha and of Buddha's mission was not so the brāhmanas of strong as that of the orthodox brāhmaṇas and brāhmaṇical teachers.

They could not look with favour upon persons having no sympathy with their upon persons having no sympathy with their faiths and discouraging the observance of the

I Kern, op. cit., pp. 33, 37; Watters' Yuan Chwang, I, pp. 389, 392,

<sup>2</sup> Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 64ff.

KOSALA.

forms and practices of their religion, not to speak of one who had raised the standard of revolt against same1. To some of the orthodox brāhmanas, even the sight of the shaven-headed Buddha at the time of performance of sacrifices was considered ominous. The sight of Buddha at some distance was a cause for consternation to Aggika-Bharadvāja who exclaimed as follows to stop the further progress of the Preacher towards the place where he was performing a sacrifice: "Tatr'eva mundaka tatr'eva samanaka, tatr'eva vasalaka titthāhi" [(Stay) there, O Shaveling, (stay) there, O Samanaka (wretched samana) (stay) there, O Vasalaka (outcast)]2. The adverse opinions held by the brahmanas generally about him have found expression in many places in the Nikāyas in passages like the following,-"Who are these shavelings, sham friars, menial black fellows, the offscouring of our kinsmen's They even sneered at the idea of heels."3 Buddha coming 'to converse with brahmanas versed in the threefold Vedic lore'4. We find

I Sutta Nipāta, pp. 50ff.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., p. 21; (translated in S. B. E. vol. X., p. 20)

<sup>3</sup> Dīgh. Nik., I, p. 103.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid., I, pp. 81ff.

it mentioned that a brahmana was offended with a brāhmaņa lady with buddhistic leanings for uttering in his presence the formula of salutation to Buddha and cursed her for doing so1. Evidences of hatred of Buddhism like those mentioned above can be multiplied but those that have been adduced are enough to show the antipathy felt by the brahmanas of Kosala towards Buddha and his disciples. The nature of the opposition encountered by Buddha in the place accounts for many of the topics on which discourses were delivered by him or discussions were carried on with the local brahmanas e.g. the origin of the caste-system and the purpose it serves; inefficacy of sacrifices; absurdity of solving the indeterminable problems like the existence or non-existence of soul; permanence and impermanence of the world etc; the falling off of the brahmanas from the ancient brahmanic ideal; the truth underlying the belief in spiritual sanctification by bathing in the rivers; the dependence of the gods of the brahmanic pantheon on the law of karma, and so forth<sup>2</sup>.

The brāhmaṇas of Kosala had strong attachment to their religion and were lovers of truth,

I Majjh. Nik., II, p. 210.

<sup>2</sup> For references, see ante, I.

in whichever form it might be found. Buddha

Extent of success of Buddha's mission among the brāhmaṇas of Kosala.

achieved success in his mission in a great measure by appealing to this love of truth. He explained to them that the religion which they were following had in it a large measure of alloy which had diminished the value of the religion. The rites and ceremonies and false beliefs that grew round the modicum of truth imbedded in the religion served but to cover it with a thick coating of untruth. Buddha by his power of disputation and knowledge of the brahmanic lore brought home to the brahmanas the truths that he was preaching. As soon as they saw the hollowness of their beliefs or the unsoundness of their philosophy, they with their characteristic love of truth embraced the religion which was placed before their eyes with all its charm. of them continued as laymen declaring their faith in Buddha, Dhamma, and Sangha while others went further and became bhikkhus. Rich and influential brāhmana householders like Jānussoni1, Aggika-Bharadvāja2, and Dhananjani8

<sup>1</sup> Majjh. Nik., I, p. 175.

<sup>2</sup> Sutta Nipāta, p. 21.

<sup>3</sup> Majih, Nik., II, p. 209.

professed themselves as life-long upasakas of of Buddha, Dhamma, and Sangha. Intelligent and learned as they were, they naturally presented difficulty to Buddha in having them converted but once convinced of the truth of Buddha's doctrines, they proved to be his staunch adherents. When Buddha commenced his missionary work in Kosala, he was not so hopeful, but judging by the results of his missionary work here, it would not, I think, be wide of the mark to state that the difficulty of the task added to the glory of the success achieved, and the number of brahmanas converted at this place was larger than those converted by him at any other. The distinct achievement of Buddha in this brahmanic country is the conversion of some of the distinguished brahmana teachers (mahāsālas) who lived on grants of villages made by kings and were held in high respect by the people of the locality. In spite of their high positions as orthodox brahmana teachers, and regardless of the advice and importunities of their disciples and admirers, the renowned mahāsālas Pokkharasādi of Ukkattha1, Lohicca of Sālavatikā<sup>2</sup>, and Canki of Opasāda

<sup>1</sup> Digh. Nik., I, p. 87.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., I, p. 224.

took refuge in Buddha and promised to be his followers up to the end of their lives (ajjatagge pāņupetam saraņam gatam). So great became Buddha's fame in Kosala that the sixteen disciples of Bāvari came from as far a place as the bank of the Godavari to join the order1. It is not expressly stated in the Pitakas how far the social status of the brahmanas was affected by their becoming upāsakas (lay-devotees). Dr. Law suggests on the basis of a few statements in the Nikāyas that these upāsakas by their declaration of attachment to Buddhism, however slight it might be, made themselves marked in the eyes of the people belonging to the Hindu society, and the thin end of the gulf that intervened at this stage became wider in proportion to the greater degrees of devotion to Buddhism developed in them in course of time. This gradually gave rise to a Buddhist lay-society2. The Nikāyas mention only those names of brahmana converts with whom Buddha or his disciples had conversation or disputation. The names when scrutinized show that a pretty large number of brāhmaṇas of various ranks in life were converted. To give a clear idea, a few of these names with the names of the places to which the brāhmaṇas belonged are given below:—

I Sutta Nipāta., pp. 192ff—Bāvari was once the purohita of King Mahākosala and his son Pasenadi. He retired to the bank of the Godāvarī where a hermitage was built for him by Pasenadi.

<sup>2</sup> Dr. N. Law, op. cit.

Brāhmaṇagahapatis of Sālā, Upāsaka, (Majjh. I, 285) Kapaṭhika mānava of Opasāda, ,, (Majjh., II, 164) Brāhmaṇas of Nagaravinda, ,, (Majjh., III, 290)

", ", Manasākata, ", (Dīgh., I, 235)

,, Venāgapura, ,, (Ang., III, 30) ,, Icchānangala, ,, (Ang., III, 30)

" Dandakappakam, " (Ang., III, 402)

Also Jānussoņi, Sundarīkabharadvāja, Pingalakoccha, Assalāyana, Esukāri, Subha, Sangara and a host of brāhmaņas of Sāvatthi who became Upāsakas. (See Majjh., I. pp. 39, 175, 205; II, pp. 147, 177, 208, 209; Dīgh., III, p. 81; Sam., I, pp. 177ff).

Like other countries, Kosala had also many paribbājakārāmas¹ the most frequented of which was the one provided by Queen Mallikā at Sāvatthi². Buddha and his disciples, and even, sometimes, his lay-disciples³ visited these ārāmas, ı Ang. Nik., IV, p. 378 ; V, p. 48 "aññatitthiyānam paribbājakānam ārāma"

<sup>2</sup> Majjh. Nik., II, p. 22 "Samayappavadako tindukācīro ekasālako Mallikāya ārāmo"

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., II, p. 23.

eagerly heard the views of these paribbājakas, and expressed their disapproval of Buddha and those views if they thought it necessary to do so. There were also occasions when the paribbājakas approached Buddha for removing their doubts. As the result of these interviews we hear of paribbājakas like Vekhanassa1 and Potthapada2 becoming lay-devotees of Buddha. The high estimation in which Buddha was held by some of the paribbajakas is evident from the reply given by Pilotika to Janussoni's query about Buddha's erudition, "Who am I to judge of the knowledge of Samana Gotama, who am I to be able to praise him; he is the praised of the praiseworthy, the best of gods, of men; whoever approaches him for disputation whether he be a brāhmaņa, khattiya, gahapati or samana-pandita, he comes back satisfied with the exposition of his dhamma"3. From these remarks it need not be supposed that Buddha had an unqualified success among the paribbājakas as there were many members of the class who would never recognise the excellences of the religion.

I Majjh. Nik., II, p, 40. He was the founder of a brāhmanical paribbājaka order.

<sup>2</sup> Dīgh. Nik., I, p. 178.

<sup>3</sup> Majjh. Nik., I, p. 175.

The greatest part of Buddha's missionary career was spent at Jetavanārāma in Sāvatthi. He resided here for twenty one vassas in addi-

Buddha converts Pasenadi of Kosala. tion to many visits paid to it at other times. In this way king Pasenadi got many opportunities of meeting him and holding with him conversation on religious topics.

From the references to Pasenadi in the Majjhima and Anguttara Nikāyas and in the Kosalasamyutta of the Samyutta Nikāya, it is evident that the king was a follower of the brāhmaṇic religion, had the brāhmaṇa Bāvari as his first purohita, and celebrated sacrifices involving slaughter of hundreds of animal victims. One of his queens Mallikā, and his two sisters Somā and Sakulā, were lay-devotees of Buddha? It was probably through the influence of these ladies combined with the occasional instructions from Buddha that the mind of the king was gradually softened towards Buddhism. Later on he declared himself a lay-devotee of Buddha and showed signs of his devotion by occasional gifts to the members of the Order<sup>1</sup>.

I Sam. Nik., I, pp. 75-6; Sutta Nipāta. P

<sup>2</sup> Majjh. Nik., II, pp. 108, 125-6.

Though the infant religion could not at first secure patronage from the king, it did from Anāthapindika, a great magnate of Anātha-Savatthi and the High Treasurer pindika. of the realm. His valuable advice combined with pecuniary help made it possible for the religion to strike its root deep into the soil of Kosala. It was he who organised the delivery of a few discourses by Buddha to lay-people regarding the duties of house-holders and the place occupied by them under his religion. It was these discourses that served as the guide of the house-holders in the performance of their duties as lay-Buddhists2. Thus it was Anāthapindika through whose efforts a place was assigned by Buddha to the lay-Buddhists in the framework of his religion. The postponement of a due recognition of their relation to Buddhism, important as it was, would not have been conducive to the speedy development of the organisation, in and through which the religion expanded itself.

The lay-devotee, who as a supporter of

For details, see supra, pp. 70, 71.

<sup>2</sup> Ang. Nik., V, p. 1.

ranked next to Anathapindika in Buddhism importance, was Visākhā, the daughter of a seṭṭhi of Sāketa, and wife of the son of a rich setthi of Sāvatthi. She per-Visākhā and others. suaded her father-in-law Migara and other members of the family to give up their faith in the doctrines of Nigantha Nataputta and adopt those of Buddha. Her anxiety for the comforts of the monks and nuns has become proverbial1. She built the Pubbarama monastery where Buddha resided for six vassas. was at her instance that many of the Vinaya rules for both the bhikkhus and bhikkhunīs were framed. Three other note-worthy lay-converts of Kosala whose names may be mentioned in this connection are Gaṇaka Moggalāna, Pañcakanga thapati and Isidatta-purāņa thapati who were all high state-officials.

A notable incident connected with Buddha's missionary work in Kosala is the radical change brought about in the life of Angulimāla who was so turbulent that even the king of the realm could not restrain him. He turned a bhikkhu and ultimately reached arahatship. This conversion made a great impression upon the minds of the people of Kosala as also of the king<sup>1</sup>, and helped greatly the propagation of the religion.

<sup>1</sup> Vinaya, MV., VIII, 15, 7.

<sup>2</sup> Majjh, Nik., III, p. 1,

I have confined myself up to now to the relation of incidents that took place at Sāvatthi and its neighbourhood in course of Buddha's missionary work there. The events connected with the Sākyas in the Sākya territory will now engage our attention. Though the kingdom of the Sākyas falls within the limits of Kosala, the Sākyas were politically independent and formed a separate entity from the social standpoint with customs and practices peculiar to itself. They were followers of the brāhmaņic religion and did not at first look with favour upon the idea of Buddha launching a new religion in direct opposition to the time-honoured ones. If we examine carefully the account of the reception accorded by the Sākyas to Buddha at the time of his visit to the land of his birth after Enlightenment, it will be evident that there was a rift in the lute welcoming his arrival. The people forgot to provide food for the Teacher and his disciples on the first day, refused to give them alms on the following day when they went out for collection of alms, deputed only those Sākyas who were junior to Buddha to receive him. These acts reveal the feeling entertained by them at the time towards Buddha and his religion. The situation was so dismal that Buddha had to have recourse to miracles for bringing the Sākyas under control. Ultimately he made a few converts from among the Sākyas, some of whom came to be counted among the leading disciples of Buddha<sup>2</sup>.

Buddha among the Sākyas. the k

<sup>1</sup> Majjh. Nik., II, p. 23.

Nigantha Nataputta had been among the Nigantha Nataputta among the Säkyas. Sākyas some time before Buddha and secured some followers. Mahānāma, a relation of Buddha, had Jaina leanings. To bring him round, Buddha delivered to him a discourse on the uselessness of the severe forms of self-mortification practised by the Jaina ascetics<sup>3</sup>. The result of this discourse upon Mahānāma's mind has not been mentioned anywhere. He, however, appears as an interlocutor<sup>4</sup>

I Hardy's Manual of Buddhism, pp. 198ff.; Burlingame's Buddhist Legends, III, pp. 2ff.

<sup>2</sup> See supra, pp. 103-8.

<sup>3</sup> Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 91-95.

<sup>4</sup> Ang. Nik., I, p. 219; III, p. 286; IV, p. 220.; Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 91, 354 etc.

in many discourses, but nowhere does he appear as giving up his faith to adopt Buddhism. nature of the topics dealt with in the discourses delivered by Buddha at Devadaha near Kapilavatthu suggests the inference that there were at the place a few followers of Nigantha Nātaputta. There is no reference to the conversion of any of these Jainas to Buddhism. Moggalāna who was with Buddha at the time succeeded however, in converting Vappa, a Sākyan Jaina to Buddhism1. The discourses delivered by Buddha at Nigrodhārāma in Kapilavatthu speak of many lay-devotees coming to hear them2. This as well as the fact that the Sākyans requested the Teacher to celebrate the inaugural ceremony of a new santhāgāra at Kapilavatthu testify to the fact that by his preaching he succeeded in making his religion popular among the local Sākyas3. He could not however make any headway in the brahmana village in the Sākyan territory, such as Sīlavati, Sakkara, Sāmāgama, Cātumā, Medalumpa4 with the

STALLY

<sup>1</sup> Ang. Nik., II, 196ff.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, V, p. 83.

<sup>3</sup> Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 358ff. Sam. Nik., IV, pp. 182ff; Buddhist India, pp. 19-20.

<sup>4</sup> Buddhist India, p. 18; Sam. Nik., I, p. 119; II,

exception of the village Khomadussa where all the brāhmaṇas seated in an assembly embraced Buddhism after hearing the preaching of the Teacher<sup>1</sup>.

As stated above the essential portion of the Buddhist disciplinary code was made at Rājagaha, where the organisation of the Buddhist monastic order was first set on foot. The disciplinary rules framed at Sāvatthi and Kapilavatthu were therefore of a more or less supplementary character, though in point of number they were the largest. As new cases arose, the rules framed at the primary stage of the Sangha had to be added to or modified at Sāvatthi. During his long stay at the place Buddha thought out the minute details of many of the Vinaya rules and tried to make the code as comprehensive as possible. The rules framed in Kosala are:—

(A). Re. Initiation.—(1) Rāhula having been ordained without the knowledge of his mother and grandfather, the latter requested the Teacher to introduce the rule that no one should be ordained without the permission of his parents (1. 54. 6.).

p. 243, III, p. 5, IV, p. 14, V, p. 2; Majjh. Nik., I, p. 456, II, p. 118.

I Sam.: Nik., I, p. 184.

- (2) The following were declared ineligible for admission into the order in addition to those already named in the rules framed at Rājagaha, viz., a maimed person, an eunuch, a false titthiya, a parricide, an arhanticide, a saṅghabhedaka etc. It was further enjoined that if any ineligible person be ordained by mistake, he should be turned out of the order (1.6). To stop the ordination of undesirable or disqualified persons, an elaborate procedure for ordination was also formulated. (1.76,77,78).
- (3). A slight relaxation of the rule for initiation was made by allowing a bhikkhu who reverted to the life of a house-holder to have ordination again if he repented for his action. (1.79).
- (B). Re. Upajjhāya and Ācariya.—Hitherto the rule was that a bhikkhu could have one sāmaņera only, but at Sāvatthi, the rule was modified permitting intelligent bhikkhus to have more than one sāmaņera. Additional checks were also laid down on the mutual duties of the student and the teacher (1. 55, 57, 58, 60).
- (C). Re. Ten Precepts.—During the first few years of Buddha's career he did not specify the number of precepts that the bhikkhus should observe, though in a general way they were taught through discourses the necessity of establishing control over kāyakamma, vacīkamma and manokamma. The sāmaņeras became naturally inquisitive as to the number of the precepts, and requested Buddha to enumerate and define them. Buddha complied with their request, thereby framing the rule as to the number of precepts to be practised by the bhikkhus.

(D). Re. Vassavāsa.—Though the idea of introducing the system of remaining at a fixed place (vassavāsa) during the rains first struck the Teacher when he was at Rājagaha, the detailed rules for the guidance of monks as to their duties and functions during the period of vassa as well as at its close were worked out at Sāvatthi. The mentionable among them are:

(1) Sattāhakaranīya or the rule of breaking the continuity of vassavāsa for seven days on account of unavoidable circumstances connected with the welfare of the Sangha. (III. 5-8).

(2) The detailing of the adverse circumstances under which vassavāsa may be discontinued.

(3) The rules for holding the Pavāranā ceremony at the end of vassa when the bhikkhus had to confess their sins committed during the period; also rules prescribing punishments to be inflicted on them for non-confession, or for maliciously bringing a false charge against any bhikkhu.

- (4) The rules regarding the Kathina ceremony of the offering of robes to the bhikkhus by the laity at the close of a vassavāsa Many difficulties arose regarding the proper preservation and distribution of the robes. Elaborate rules had therefore to be laid down.
- (E). Re. Medicaments.—Originally, the bhikkhus could use cow's urine only as medicine. But in course of time the rule regarding the use of medicines was much relaxed, permitting the bhikkhus to use all kinds of medicines. Permission was also given to the invalid bhikkhus to use, for their conveyance vehicles, sedan-chairs, etc. (VIII. 26).

Though the order of nuns was instituted at Vesāli in the fifth year of Buddha's ministry, the necessity for a bhikkhunī-code was not felt till a year or two later. Sāvatthi provided a large number of abodes for the nuns. This accounted for the existence of a large number of nuns in the town. This fact suggested to Buddha the urgency of disciplinary code for the nuns. Buddha thus set himself to framing the code and as the result of his labours, almost the whole of the Pātimokkha for the bhikkhunīs was completed. According to the Parivārapātha, 294 rules of the bhikkhu and bhikkhunī-Pātimokkha were laid down at Sāvatthi, but on actual calculation, we find the number to be 286. They comprise  $P\bar{a}r\bar{a}jik\bar{a}$  4,  $Sangh\bar{a}disesa$  15,  $Aniyat\bar{a}$  2,  $Nissaggiy\bar{a}$  34,  $Khuddak\bar{a}ni$  148,  $G\bar{a}rayha$  10, Sekhiya 73<sup>1</sup>.

It was at this place that a very important part of the Vinaya came into existence. Though Buddha had framed a good many rules for the guidance of the monks he mentioned in general terms the punishments for the breaches of the rules. In regard to many offences Buddha only referred to the class of the punishment that should be visited upon the offender. This gave rise to uncertainty as to the gravity or length of term of the punishment. To remove this difficulty as also to put on a sound footing the procedure for proving the guilt of an alleged offender before a panel of monks, he formulated elaborate rules governing the details of the various cases.

This sketch of the spread of Buddhism in Kosala would not be complete without a reference to at least some of the various centres established within the territory for facilitating the propagation of the religion and the pursuit of spiritual exercises by the bhikkhus. The name of Jetavana rises first in our mind.

I Vinaya, V, p. 145.

As it is too well-known to need a description here, I pass on to the next important centre, Pubbārāma, a great monastery, built by Visākhā six to seven miles to the north-east of the Jetavana Vihāra. It could accommodate a large number of monks and nuns in its numerous chambers while it afforded facilities for deep meditation in its secluded cells. On account of the amenities of monk-life available here, it was a favourite resort of Buddha and his disciples, the former passing there so many as six vassas1. The existence of the hermitages of Kālākārāma, Kantakivana and Añjanavana<sup>2</sup> at Sāketa is responsible for the name of the place as a resort of bhikkhus. was very probably Visākhā's father Dhanañjaya, who by taking a leading part in the movement, made it a Buddhist centre. Andhavana, situated at a short distance to the north-west Jetavana Vihāra, ranks next to Pubbārāma in the provision of facilities to monks and nuns for meditation and spiritual exercises. It has been specially mentioned in the Samyutta Nikāyas

I Hardy's Manual, p. 356

<sup>2</sup> Ang. Nik., II, p. 24; III, p. 169; IV, p 427; Sam. Nik., V, pp. 73, 174, 217.

<sup>3</sup> Sam. Nik., I, p. 128, Alavikā bhikkhuņī yena Andhavanam ten' upasankami vivekatthikinī. See also Watters' Yuan Chwang. I, p. 398.

154

that nuns of Ālavi (a suburb of Sāvatthi) seeking solitude used to come to this monastery. There were at Ālavi the hermitages Aggālava and Gomagga Siṃsāpavana which were also resorted to by the nuns. Midway between Sāvatthi and Setavyā stood Ukkaṭṭha containing an ārāma where two discourses of Buddha relating to the position of Brahmā were delivered.

1 Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 1, 326.

V

The Democracies

The territory to the east of Kosala and north of Anga and Magadha was occupied mainly by the various clans, namely, the Vajjis, Licchavis, Videhas, Mallas, Bhaggas, and Koliyas. All these clans lived side by side and most probably belonged to the same stock, and this accounted for the similarity of beliefs and practices that prevailed among them. Information about the ways in which the several clans except the Licchavis opposed the introduction of Buddhism among them is extremely scanty. It is only about the Licchavis that we can give a running account. Though the territory of this clan lay outside the Prevalence of brāhmaṇism among the Licchavis, limits of the brāhmaņic middlecountry, yet brāhmaņism was here the prevailing religion. Belief in the brāhmaņic pantheon, ceremonial worship of deities, performance of sacrifices, observances of ascetic practices, etc., wereall current among its members. They however were not so orthodox as to prevent the non-brāhmaṇical religions from taking root in their country. We find that a brahmana named Kāraṇapāli used to perform the religious functions of the Licchavis (Licchavinam kammantam There is also reference to another brāhmaņa named Pingiyāni receiving cloths from the Licchavi youths as a token of their respect for him1. There were a good many shrines on the outskirts of Vesali and the regular worship of the images of the deities enshrined there was carried on by the Licchavis2. Again the fact that the Licchavis worshipped many gods and goddesses of the brahmanic pantheon at the time when their country was being ravaged by famine and pestilence is very significant. These instances are sufficient to show that the Licchavis were imbued to a large extent with the spirit of brahmanism. But inspite of this fact, the path of progress of Buddhism among the Licchavis could not have been as thorny as among the people who were orthodox from the brahmanic standpoint.

When Buddha came among the Licchavis, Jainism had already run through a career of about 250 years from the time of Parśvanātha and had adherents in many of the Licchavis.

I Ang. Nik., III, p. 236.

<sup>2</sup> Dīgh. Nik., II, p. 102; Mallas also had such shrines e. g. Makuṭabandhana.

This long career of Jainism in the kingdom of Vesāli was not there the only source of its strength. Nigantha Nātaputta, the reformer of Jainism, belonged to a distinguished family of the Nāta clan with wide influence in the land. This also operated as a source of strength to the religion, as it made it difficult for Buddha and his followers to carry on their missionary work. We have in the Nikāyas accounts of a few adherents of Nigantha Nātaputta either disputing with Buddha or coming into contact with him or his followers in the course of their missionary work. In the first account we find that Saccaka, who as a disputant was held in high respect by the Licchavis, sustains a defeat in a religious disputation with Buddha. It is not however clear whether he became a Buddhist convert as the result of the defeat1. In the second account in the Anguttara Nikāya, Abhaya and Panditakumāraka enquired of Ananda about the means of destruction of dukkha as pointed out by Buddha and were not satisfied with the answer<sup>2</sup>. On another occasion he approached Buddha with the question whether either by moral purity or severe penance. Buddha replied that it was only full control over mind, body, and speech that could save a person from  $ogha^1$ . The most notable conversion made by Buddha among the lay Jainas was that of Sīha who was a military official of the Licchavis and had a great influence in the country. Inspite of Nigaṇṭha Nātaputta's dissuasion, he met Buddha, and impressed by his teachings, became an  $up\bar{a}saka$ . The weaning of Sīha from the Jaina faith gave a rude shock to Nigaṇṭha Nātaputta's followers who out of jealousy circulated the false report that Sīha had killed animals for feeding Buddha and the bhikkhus<sup>2</sup>.

Jainism among the Licchavis before Buddha's advent.

I Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 236, 250.

<sup>2</sup> Ang. Nik., I, pp. 220-222.

Inspite of active oppositions of this nature, Buddha continued his work of conversion in right earnest. The high encomiums showered on Buddha by the Licchavis at a meeting of their assembly, the feeling of wonder expressed by Mahānāma at the sudden change of the Licchavi youths under Buddha's influence<sup>3</sup>, and the desire of Otthaddha Licchavi with a large retinue to hear Buddha's discourses1, show that Buddha could create a favourable impression on the minds of the local people and achieve some success in his missionary activities. As a mark of their devotion to Buddha they dedicated to him not only the Mahāvana Kūṭāgārasālā but also a large number of Cetiyas which were also highly appreciated by him as places for meditation?. Of these Cetiyas, the one at Gosingasālavana was particularly liked by him and his chief disciples Sāriputta and Moggalana who passed there many a day in meditation3. The conversions made by Buddha among the Licchavis were not commensurate with the acts of generosity mentioned above, as the cases of conversion mentioned in the Nikāyas are not many. Ānanda's exclusion of Vesāli from the list of places where the laydevotees lived in large numbers also point the same conclusion1. The names Mahāli, Mahānāma, Ugga-gahapati, Nandaka the

I Ang. Nik., II, pp. 200-202.

<sup>2</sup> Vinya, VI, 31, 12.

<sup>3</sup> Dr. B. C. Law, Ksattriya Clans in Buddhist India, pp. 88,89.

<sup>1</sup> Dīgh. Nik., I., p. 151.

<sup>2</sup> See Dīgh. Nik., II, p. 102. "Ramaṇīyā Ānanda Vesāli, ramaṇīyaṃ Udenaṃ cetiyaṃ, ramaṇīyaṃ Gotamakaṃ cetiyaṃ, r. Bahuputtaṃ c., r. Sārandadaṃ c., r. Cāpalaṃ c."

<sup>3</sup> Majjh. Nik., I. p. 212; Ang. Nik., V, pp. 133-4

<sup>1</sup> Dīgh. Nik., II, p. 169.

minister, Pingiyāni brāhmaņa and a few others converts to Buddhism. mentioned as Otthaddha Licchavi and Bhaggava paribbājaka were much impressed by the teachings of Buddha but they did not adopt the religion. On account of the attachment of Sunakkhatta Licchaviputta to other beliefs and practices, Buddha had to be disappointed in him. He joined the order as a bhikkhu and remained as such for about three years. He expected to see the exhibition of his miraculous powers and to have from him the solution of some of the indeterminable problems, all of which Buddha deliberately avoided on principle. This exasperated Sunakkhatta who left the order and commenced speaking ill of it broadcast. This disparagement by Sunakkhatta became the topic of many discussions between Buddha and the Licchavis to whom he explained his position by stating that the benefits of the religion could not be derived by one who had attachment to other teachers and their doctrines and practices1.

One of the most important events in the history of Buddhism transpired at Vesāli. It was here that Buddha gave his consent to the formation of the order of nuns at the importunities of Ānanda and Mahāpajāpati Gotamī. The latter had already Consent to the formation of the order of nuns. advanced a little as a lay-devotee in the path of sanctification at the time of conversion of Rāhula and Nanda. It was after the death of King Suddhodana that she in the fulness of her grief resolved to embrace the life of a recluse. She formed a band of recluses by bringing together a few ladies who had been bent on retirement from the world for some reason or other. With them she travelled under great physical stress and strain from Kapilavatthu to Vesāli where Buddha was staying and obtained his consent to the formation of the order of nuns by agreeing to comply with the eight ordinances laid down at the time by Buddha for the bhikkhuṇīs¹. She made a steady progress in spiritual culture under the guidance of Buddha and soon attained the highest stage of sanctification.

<sup>1</sup> Digh Nik., I, pp. 150ff; III, pp. 2ff.

Buddha's conversion made on this occasion was that of the famous courtezan Ambapāli who gave away her Ambavana to the Buddhist sangha. It was while dwelling at Cāpala Cetiya situated on the outskirts of Vesāli that Buddha resolved to end his mortal existence in three months.

<sup>1</sup> Ang Nik., IV, p. 274.

During Buddha's residence at Vesāli he brought into operation for the discipline of the bhikkhus a few additional measures, which are as follows:—

- (1) The bhikkhus were practically prohibited from taking fish or flesh by the framing of the rule that they could take them if the fish or the animals had not been seen, heard, or suspected to have been killed for the bhikkhus (vi, 31. 14).
- (2) In view of the scarcity of food at Vesāli at a particular time, certain rules were relaxed allowing the bhikkhus to keep food and cook it indoors, eat such articles of food as they could pick up, take food before meal-time etc<sup>1</sup>. When there was plenty in the land after some time, the rules were restored to their former severity.
- (3) The bhikkhus were allowed to have a Kappiyabhūmi outside their dwelling-place for the temporary storing of food (vi, 33).

(4) The number of robes of the bhikkhus was limited to three.

(5) An abnormal increase in the number of cases of religious suicide led to the promulgation of the rule prohibiting absolutely the commission of suicide generally ( $P\bar{a}r\bar{a}$ . III).

1 S. B. E., XVII, p. 118,

Of the  $P\bar{a}timokkha$  rules, ten were framed at Vesāli, comprising three under  $P\bar{a}r\bar{a}jik\bar{a}$ , two under Nissaggiya  $P\bar{a}cittiya$ , and three under  $P\bar{a}cittiya$ .

The kingdom of Videha became in the pre-Buddhistic days an important centre of brāhmaṇic culture on account of King Janaka's enthusiasm, and patronage of learning and spiritual culture which converted his court into an important meeting-place of learned men specially from the western countries of Kosala and Kuru-Pañcāla¹. The Makhādeva and Mahājanaka Jātakas and the Brahmāyu Sutta of the Majjhima Nikāya² testify to the prevalence of brāhmaṇism in Videha at the time of Buddha. The Nikāyas are silent as to Buddha's missionary work in the place and the volume of opposition met by him there in the propagation of his religion. It is only in the Majjhima Nikāya that we find that he stayed at Makhādeva-ambavana of Mithilā and converted on a certain occasion

I Brhadāranyaka Upaniṣad, III; Oldenberg's Buddha, p. 398.

<sup>2</sup> Majjh. Nik., II., pp. 74ff; 133ff.

164

Brahmāyu a distinguished and an old brāhmaṇa teacher.

Not so however fruitless was his work among the Bhaggas. Buddha succeeded in converting three distinguished inhabitants of the Buddha among the Bhagga country, namely Nakulapitā, Nakulamātā, and Bodhirājakumāra. There might have been other converts but their names do not appear in the Nikāyas. Buddha and his chief disciple Moggalāna visited this place on two or three occasions and stayed at Sumsumāragiri Bhesakalāvana-migadāya. Buddha delivered a few discourses, at the instance of Nakulapitā and Nakulamātā, two of his most favourite lay-disciples, detailing the duties of house-holders. The discourses delivered here by Moggalāna relate to the means of overcoming passions (māratajjanīya)². It was while Buddha was residing in this country that Bodhirājakumāra requested Buddha to stay in his newly built palace Kokanada for a day sanctifying it by his presence, and give him opportunity of formally taking refuge in

<sup>I Ang. Nik., II, p. 61; III, p. 295; IV, pp. 85,
268; Sam. Nik., IV, p. 116.</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Majih. Nik., I, pp. 95, 332.

Buddha, Dhamma, and Sangha<sup>1</sup>. Three of the minor  $P\bar{a}timokkha$  rules, one under  $P\bar{a}cittiya$  and two under Sekhiya were framed here.

In his missionary work Buddha was more successful among the Koliyas than among the Bhaggas. This was due partly to the contiguity of the Koliyas to the Sākyas and partly Buddha among the Koliyas. to the Koliya and wife.

to the connection of Buddha with Uthe Koliyas through his mother and wife. The first visit paid by Buddha to this country was from Vesāli in the fifth year of his ministry when a fight became imminent between the Sākyas and the Koliyans over the right of drawing water from a stream<sup>2</sup>. It was when the armies of the two clans were arrayed in the battle-field that Buddha intervened and brought about an amicable settlement by his thoughtful and pacifying discourses. Many members of both the clans were struck by Buddha's greatness and were moved so much by his teachings that they retired from the world to become bhikkhus. Of those who were converted to Buddhism at this place, the names of Punna-govatika and Seniyakukkuravatika should be mentioned, as they were typical brāhmaņic ascetics believing in the efficacy of severe penances¹. Kakudha Koliyaputta became a saddhivihārika (novice) of Moggalāna,² while Suppāvāsā Koliyadhītā praised by Buddha as the chief of the panītadāyikānam (givers of sweet food)³, and Pātaliyagāmanī, who required a pretty long discourse dealing with the various contemporary doctrines and the excellences of Buddhism to be convinced, became lay-devotees⁴.

I Majjh. Nik., II, p. 91.

<sup>2</sup> Burlingame's Buddhist Legends, III, pp. 70ff; Jātakas, V, pp. 412-413; Hardy's Manual, pp. 317-20.

The prominence attained by the Mallas of Kusinārā in the Buddhist literature is due to the Buddha among the Mallas. accident of Kusinārā being the site of Buddha's parinibbāna. The reason underlying the objection made by Ānanda to the selection of the place by Buddha for his parinibbāna was that it was unimportant as a centre of Buddhism. The mandate issued by the Assembly of the Mallas that persons not according welcome to Buddha would be fined 500 kahāpanas shows that there was among the Mallas a party

I Majjh. Nik., I, p. 387.

<sup>2</sup> Ang. Nik., III, p. 122.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., I, p. 26; II, p. 62.

<sup>4</sup> Sam. Nik., IV., pp. 340-358.

THE DEMOCRACIES

opposed to Buddha and his religion. Malla Roja belonged to this party but on coming into contact with Buddha, he could not resist turning a upāsaka<sup>1</sup>. Of the two well-known converts from this clan, one was Dabba Mallaputta, the distributer of food and assingnor of residences to the monks at Rājagaha<sup>2</sup>, while the other was Cunda kammāraputta who by serving to Buddha his last meal has been immortalized in the Buddhist literature<sup>3</sup>.

The Malla country is the scene of two important discourses delivered by Buddha. One of them is the sutta in the Anguttara Nikāya meant to explain to Tapassu gahapati the great charm inhering in the spiritual exercises practised by a monk, by virtue of which they could spurn the pleasures of worldly life. It was the attraction of this happiness in the life of a monk that persuaded even youngmen to turn recluses. Buddha explained the successive stages by which the highest spiritual culture could be reached through this life of meditation and discipline 1. The other discourse is the Kinti sutta of the Majjhima

I Vinaya, I, pp. 247, 248.

<sup>2</sup> See ante, p. 99.

<sup>3</sup> Dīgh. Nik., II, pp. 126-8.

<sup>4</sup> Ang. Nik., V, p. 263.

168

SPREAD OF BUDDHISM

Nikāya in which Buddha explained that he was out as a preacher not from any selfish motive but for the spiritual uplift of men who had by previous karma an innate inclination to the attainment of deliverance from the worldly miseries and required some assistance and guidance for the achievement of their object1.

1 Majih. Nik., II, pp. 238-243.

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

VI

Other Eastern Countries

1. ANGA. In the estimation of the orthodox brāhmaņas, Anga occupied a place similar to that of Magadha, for it was beyond the Sadanīra and was looked down upon along Similarity with Magadha as a country unfit of conditions in for the performance of sacrifice and Anga and bad enough to be a place whither Magadha in regard to fever should be driven away from religion. Brahmarsi-deśa1. Anga like Magadha had renowned brāhmaṇa teachers, two of whom are mentioned in the Nikāyas. One is Soṇadaṇḍa brāhmaṇa living at Campā with 300 students and having a permanent source of income granted him by king Bimbisāra<sup>2</sup>, and the other is Pārāsariya brāhmaṇa dwelling at Kajangala<sup>3</sup> with Uttara mānava and other students<sup>4</sup>. Anga felt

I Śatapatha-Brāhmaṇa, I. 4, I; Atharva Veda, v, 22, 14.

<sup>2</sup> Digh. Nik., I, pp. 111ff.

<sup>3</sup> For identification, see Cunningham's Ancient Geography (2nd. ed.), pp. xliii, 548, 723; J. R. A. S., 1904.

<sup>4</sup> Majjh. Nik., III, p. 298.

170

also the influence of Nigantha Nātaputta as apparent from the fact that Anāthapindika's son-in-law belonged to a family with Jaina persuasion. There were also in Anga paribbājakārāmas where the paribbājakas stayed from time to time in the course of their tour. The importance of the country in the history of the spread of Buddhism is on account of its being the easternmost place reached by Buddhism within Buddha's life-time. According to the Vinaya, the eastern limit of the Buddhist majjhima-desa is Kajangala situated within Anga at a distance of about 66 miles to the east of Campā. It was visited by Buddha and made the scene of the last sutta of the Majjhima Nikāya on Indriya-bhāvanā.

It is not definitely stated anywhere in the Nikāyas and other treatises as to the time, when Buddha paid his first visit to the Buddha's activities in Anga.

Buddha paid his first visit to the country of Anga. On more than one occasion Buddha had been to Anga dwelling at Campā, Āpana, Assapura and Kajangala. It was during one of these visits

I Sam, Nik., V, p. 189; Majjh. Nik., I, p. 339.

<sup>2</sup> It is mentioned in the Samyutta Nikāya (V, pp. 89, 168, 169) that the easternmost place visited by Buddha in the course of his missionary tour was Setaka, a nigama of Suhma in Rācha.

that he converted the father-in-law of Anathapindika's daughter together with other members of his family. During his absence at Campa on this occasion he left Anuruddha to carry on the missionary work1. Sonadanda was converted at a time when Bimbisara, Pasenadi and Pokkharasādi had already become Buddha's disciples. The conversion of the two kings and the distinguished brāhmana teacher was cited by Sonadanda as a ground, justifying his desire to approach Buddha to listen to his teachings2. We find that during Buddha's life-time there were at Anga several lay-devotees, as evidenced not only by passages in the Majjhima and Anguttara Nikāyas3 but also by separate mentions of their names in various places in the Buddhist scriptures. The most notable of them were Pessa-hattharohaputta and Vajjiyamāhita gahapati. The former was a great admirer of the spiritual exercises and though a house-holder he tried to practise the four satipatthanas4, while the latter was praised by

<sup>1</sup> Kern's Manual, p. 38.

<sup>2</sup> Digh. Nik., I, p. 116.

<sup>3</sup> Campeyyakā upāsakā; Kajangalā upāsakā, see Majjh. Nik., III, p. 298; Ang. Nik., IV, p. 59.

<sup>4</sup> Majjh. Nik., I, p. 340. "presentness of memory

Buddha for his insight into the Buddhist dhamma, enabling him to silence those paribbājakas who spoke ill of Buddha in his presence. The Vinaya and the Thera-gāthā supply us with names of a few bhikkhus who were inhabitants of Anga. One of them is the well-known Sona-Kolivisa who was ordained a bhikkhu at Rājagaha, the others were Nandaka and Bharata whose psalms have been preserved in the Thera-gāthā². We also meet with the name of a bhikkhunī belonging to Kajangala and engaged in instructing a few lay-devotees in the principles of Buddhism³.

While Buddha was at Campā on a particular occasion, some of the bhikkhus completed a few official acts irregularly, unlawfully and without a full chapter of monks. This led Buddha to detail the various formal acts the bhikkhus were to perform, mentioning in regard (i) to the body (ii) to sensations (iii) to rising thoughts; and (iv) to Dharma". Kern, op. cit., p. 67.

1 Ang. Nik., V, pp. 189-192.

<sup>2</sup> Psalms of the Brethren, p. 135; Vinaya, MV., v. 1: it was on account of the very delicate feet of the bhikkhu Sona Kolivisa that the rule of using shoes by the bhikkhus came to be introduced.

<sup>3</sup> Majjh. Nik., III, p. 298.

the occasion, the procedure to be followed in each case, circumstances which would make them invalid and the punishments that would be inflicted on them for breaches of the rules<sup>1</sup>.

2. KĀŚĪ. The importance of Kāśī as a great centre of brāhmaṇic culture and learning is recognised in both the Brāhmaṇic and Buddhistic literature. The frequent mention of the place in the Jātakas is indicative of its great importance in those days. The Reipattana of Kāsi has been immortalized in the Pāli as well as the Buddhist-Sanskrit literature as a resort of a large number of rsis in ancient times. The selection of the locality by Buddha for the delivery of his first discourse at the commencement of his missionary career is quite in line with its sacred tradition. In this land of orthodox brāhmaṇism, Buddha's missionary work was naturally hampered by opposition from the brāhmaṇas. For this reason his success here was not so marked as it was in Magadha and Kosala. Buddha's ministration commenced with the conversion of two foreign traders Trapusa and

I Vinaya, MV, IX.

174

SPREAD OF BUDDHISM

Bhallika who were travelling with a caravan along the trade-route from Dak-Buddha's khiṇāpatha to Ukkala¹ a town in the kingdom of Gandhāra. Their conversion at Uruvela was later on commemorated by the erection of stūpas in their native villages² in Gandhāra. Buddha after enlightenment turned his thoughts first to his comrades in asceticism then residing at Isipatana near Benares. He started from Uruvela and

1 & 2 Lalitavistara (Lefmann's edition), Vol. III, pp. 303, 310, 313: Uttarāpathe Ukkalam nāmādhisthānam. .....Tehi dani yatha Kesasthali nama adhisthano tahim keśa-stūpam kārāpitam. Bālukkho nāma nagaram tahim nakha-stupam karapitam..... Trapusabhallikanam Śiluksa nāma nigama āvāsitānām.....adyāpi Gandhāra-rājye adhisthanam Śilanamena jñayati". There has been a great difference of opinion with regard to the identification of Ukkala and the birth-place of Trapusa and Bhallika. Though the phonetic similarity between Utkala (Orissa) and Ukkala is very great and the identification of Ukkala with Orissa is alluring, yet in view of the evidence supplied by the Mahavastu and supported by Yuan Chwang, Ukkala should be identified with a place in Gandhara. Yuan Chwang noticed the remains of two of the stupas mentioned above in the course of his journey from Balkh to Bamian (Watters' Yuan Chwang, I, pp. 111-113).

passed through Gaya, Aparagaya and reached Vasālā where he was invited to a meal by a huhunka brāhmana to whom he pointed out as to what makes a true brahmana and tried to convert him to Buddhism. Thence he passed through Cundadvilam and Sārathipura, crossed the Ganges and reached Benares1. Here at Isipatana he visited his five comrades who would not accept Buddha's arguments regarding the the futility of extreme self-mortifications in taking them to their spiritual goal. Their conviction had to be slowly overcome by Buddha through teachings from day to day impressing upon their minds the impermanence of all worldly things. They were enjoined to live as recluses, practising jhanas and self-control2. It was for them that he delivered his famous discourse, the Dhammacakkapavattana which is believed to have embodied truths found by Buddha under the Bodhi tree. It explains the majjhima patipadā or in other words the practice of control over citta which included dhyāna, attainment of paññā or true knowledge and perfection in the sīlas by pursuing the golden mean. The discourse shows the hollowness of extreme self-mortifications practised by the five brāhmaṇas as the only path leading to mukti (salvation). The accumulated effect of the discourse and the teachings was the conversion of the five brāhmaṇas to Buddhism.

<sup>1</sup> Mahāvastu, III, pp. 324-329; Lalitavistara, p. 406.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 173-175; Sam. Nik., III, p. 66.

176

Buddha accompanied by the five new bhikkhus passed from Isipatana to Benares and stopped on the bank of the river Varaṇā under a rich setthi's son, who had already become sick of this world. Buddha found his mind a tabula rasa fit to receive his doctrines. He therefore addressed to him his discourse on dāna (charity), sīla (moral precepts) sagga (heaven), etc., suited so much to householders¹. Yasa was ordained as a bhikkhu after which his fifty-four friends followed suit.

Thus far successful in his mission, Buddha entertained the idea of spreading his religion far and wide by utilizing the services of these sixty converts as preachers.

After sending them to their respective tasks in different places, he himself went to Uruvela for preaching his religion.

<sup>1</sup> Vinaya, MV. i, 6; Mahāvastu, vol. III, pp. 405ff; Rockhill's Life of Buddha, pp. 38-39.

Buddha spent his first vassa at Isipatana and it was long before he visited it for the second time, for he came to this place after the 12th vassa on his way from Veranja to Vesāli1. But though his visits to Isipatana as a centre. this place were not frequent, it was nevertheless a very important centre of Buddhism through the missionary efforts of some of the most prominent of his disciples namely, Sāriputta, Moggalāna, Mahākotthita, Mahākaccāyana. When Buddha was staying here during his second visit, he delivered a discourse on the true meaning of avijjā2, and advised the upāsaka Dhammadinna to follow practices enjoined in the suttantas. If these practices were too difficult for him to follow, he was asked to place faith in Buddha, Dhamma and Sangha<sup>3</sup>, for faith alone could make him a sotāpanna, that is one who is in the first stage of sanctification.

The delivery of the first discourse by Buddha at the deer-park brought the place into prominence. As it was the first scene of Buddha's missionary activities he himself clothed it with a sacred memory and ranked it among the four places of pilgrimage most sacred to a Buddhist1. The inscription on the Asoka pillar containing the warning to the sanghabhedakas (schismatics) shows that it continued at the time to be a resort many contentious Buddhist monks. beginning of a monastic establishment here are found in the Nikāyas where it is stated that bhikkhus often sat in a mandalamālā and had discussions over abhidhamma2, the interpretation of verses uttered by Buddha<sup>3</sup>, the meaning of avijjā and such other topics. As Mahākotthita figures so often in the discourses as taking part in the discussions described therein, it seems reasonable to infer that he was permanently associated with the locality.

I Kern's Manual of Indian Buddhism, p. 36; J. R. A. S., 1891.

<sup>2</sup> Sam. Nik., V, p. 429.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., V, p. 407.

The only Vinaya rule framed here relates to the delegation of the power of initiation to the disciples. Buddha had hitherto been performing the initiation personally with the simple formula "Ehi bhikkhu, svākkhato dhammo, cara brahmacariyam samma dukkhassa antakiriyāyāti (Come O bhikkhus, well taught is the doctrine, lead a holy life for the sake of the complete extinction of suffering), but with the increase of his disciples sent out from Benares it was no longer feasible for him to do so because the converts were growing larger in number and the conversions had to be made at distant places. So he had to delegate the power of initiation to his disciples and required the converts to be shaven, put on yellow robes and utter thrice the formula for taking refuge in Buddha, Dhamma and Sangha. 1

<sup>1</sup> Digh. Nik., Mahāparinibbāņa Suttanta.

<sup>2</sup> Aing. Nik., III, pp. 392-393.

Ibid., III, p. 399.

3. VATSA. Buddha had been to the country of the Vatsas on two or three occasions and passed his ninth vassa at Kosambi. His tenth vassa was passed in a neighbouring forest called

Vatra. Pārileyyaka whither he retired in disgust at the quarrel that took place between the two groups of bhikkhus of Kosambi, viz., the Dhammadharas and the Vinaya-dharas<sup>2</sup>. At Kosambi he usually stayed at the hermitage Pāvārika-ambavana built by Pāvāriya, a rich seṭṭhi. There were other hermitages, two of which had been constructed by the seṭṭhis Kukkuṭa and Ghosita. Sāmāvatī was converted by Khujjutarā praised by Buddha as the chief of the learned upāsikās. The queen's devotion to

I Vinaya, MV, vii. 15; i. 12. 3-4.

<sup>2</sup> See Bk. II of this work.

Buddha was resented very much by another queen as also by her father Magandiya, a minister of the king of Kosambi, having a great aversion to Buddha. It was during the absence of king Udena at the city that Magandiya plotted against the life of Samavati and burnt her to death. King Udena was shocked at this incident and turned an adherent of Buddhism as this was the religion that could evoke so much of religious devotion in the queen1. Of the other laydevotees, we may mention the name of Sandaka the paribbājaka who was converted against the will of his followers by Ananda2. The only bhikkhu whose name is recorded in Nikayas as belonging to the city is Pindola Bharadvaja praised by Buddha as the chief of the sīhanādikānam (lit. Lion-roarers). He was the son of the royal chaplain of Kosambi and was versed in brāhmanic lore3.

While Buddha was residing at Kosambi, he felt the necessity of framing rules for averting chances of future dissensions in his order. He detailed, as recorded in the tenth book of the Mahāvagga, the circumstances in which a schism could take place and dwelt on their evil consequences. Of the Pātimokkha rules, six were framed here, one under Sanghādisesa and five under Pācittiya.

<sup>1</sup> Buddhist India, p. 36; Burlingame, op. cit., I, pp. 277ff.; Yuan Chwang, I, p. 369; Divyāvadāna, p. 529ff.

<sup>2</sup> Majjh. Nik., I, p. 513.

<sup>3</sup> Ang. Nik., I, p. 25; Sam. Nik., V, p. 224.; Psalms of the Brethren, pp. 110-111.

4. CEDI. The country of the Cedis to the west of Kosala lay, it seems, beyond the pale of Buddhism during Buddha's lifetime. Sahajāti, a place in Cedi. Sahajāti, a place as a centre of Buddhism after the death of Buddha. In the Anguttara and Samyutta Nikāyas we come across the name of this place as the scene of some of the discourses delivered by the bhikkhu Mahācunda and as the resort of many bhikkhus².

I See Bk. II of this work.

<sup>2</sup> Ang. Nik., III, p. 355; V, pp. 41, 157; Sam. Nik., V, p. 436.

VII

Western And Northern Countries

Dr. Oldenberg's statement that Buddhism was confined only to the prācya-deśa is due, I think, to the difficulty in the consultation of unedited texts. He drew support from a passage of the Mahāparinibbāṇa Suttanta<sup>1</sup> in which Ānanda enumerated a few towns to Buddha for selecting one of them as the place of his pari nibbāṇa. As these were the towns where the Buddhist devotees lived in large numbers, the westernmost of them was taken by Dr. Oldenberg as the farthest western limit of Buddha's missionary activities<sup>2</sup>. But a close study of the of the Nikāyas shows that Buddha did travel outside the prācya-deśa as far west as Verañja, Madhurā<sup>3</sup> and as far north as the country of the Kurus<sup>4</sup>. Another evidence in support of our

Dr. Oldenberg's statement that Buddhism was confined to the prācya-deśa criticised.

<sup>1</sup> Digh. Nik., II, p. 146.

<sup>2</sup> Oldenberg's Buddha, Excursus I.

<sup>3</sup> Majjh. Nik., II, p. 83; Vinaya, Suttavibhanga I.

I ; 4.

<sup>4</sup> Majih. Nik., I, p. 55.

contention that Buddhism was not confined to  $pr\bar{a}cya$ -deśa is that many disciples of Buddha hailed from  $paccantima\ janapada$  or border

Paccantima janapada an integral part of the area within which Buddhism spread during Buddha's lifetime. countries. The reason why the designation paccantima-desa was applied to places like Samkassa and Ujjeni which are far away from the Indian Frontiers is to be found in the fact that they formed the border-land between majjhima-desa of the Buddhists and other places. The rules of discipline framed by Buddha were meant generally for those monks who resided within majjhima-desa, boundaries of which are given in the Vinaya<sup>1</sup>. Though the boundaries are not identifiable at present except on the eastern side yet it is known that places where Buddhism flourished like Saṃkassa, Avanti, Gandhāra etc. were distinguished as paccantima janapadas. Buddha himself relaxed some of the rules of discipline in regard to the monks of those places in view of the physical conditions within which they lived. This relaxation of the rules shows that

I Vinaya, I, V. 13; ix. 4. 1; J. R. A. S., 1904, pp. 83ff.; Jātaka, I; Bhandarkar's Carmichael Lectures, 1918, p. 43.

Buddha had to take note of the convenience and needs of the monks of the distant regions indicated by the expression paccantima-janapada. This proves clearly that the religion in the contemplation of Buddha was not one confined to the eastern territories alone as supposed by Dr. Oldenberg but it was as well a religion that had its roots in the regions lying outside the majjhima-desa. This is corroborated by the fact that within a century after Buddha's nibbana, Avanti and Patheyya rose to be important centres of Buddhism, so much so that the presence of monks from these distant places was regarded as indispensable at the meetings held for settling points of dispute raised by the Vajjian monks of Vesāli.

A. WESTERN COUNTRIES. Though the whole of western India was placed outside the majjhima-desa of the Vinaya, Buddhism made a fair progress there during the life-time of Buddha and played an important role in the later history of Buddhism, and that although Buddha wandered generally within the prācya-deśa, the religion however was not confined to the region, as supposed by Dr. Oldenberg, but spread over many regions of Western India counting among its adherents people from the western countries such as Roruka, Bharu-kaccha, Suppāraka. Avanti, Ujjeni, Aparānta, having their monastic establishments at some of these places. The westernmost point reached by Buddha in his peregrinations was Verañja a place near Madhurā Buddha at Veranja. in the 12th year after his enlightenment. When Buddha was at Sāvatthi, some brahmanas of Veranja (situated probably west of Madhura) were there on some business. They had a talk with him about the fruits of good and evil karma1. On one occasion Buddha was invited by Veranja brāhmaņas to go to their native country, which Buddha did at the outset of the twelfth vassa2. We find from a passage in the Anguttara Nikāya3 that Buddha once stopped on his way from Madhurā to Veranja (antarā ca Madhuram antarā ca Veranjam) and delivered there a discourse to the house-holders on the ideal husband and wife. These householders were on their way from Veranja to Madhurā. This shows that Verañja was situated near Madhurā on the analogy of similar passages

I Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 290-291.

<sup>2</sup> Burlingame's Buddhist Legends, II, p. 193; Kern's Manual of Indian Buddhism, p. 36; J. R. A. S., 1891.

<sup>3</sup> Ang. Nik., II, p. 57.

<sup>1</sup> Vinaya, III, p. 6; Burlingame's Buddhist Legends, II, p. 193.

<sup>2</sup> Ang. Nik., IV, p. 172; Vinaya, III, pp. 2ff.

<sup>3</sup> Ang. Nik., IV, pp. 197ff.

end of the vassa and accompanied by Ānanda passed through Soreyya, Sankassa, Kaṇṇakujja, Payāgapatiṭṭhānaṃ, crossed the Ganges and reached Benares¹. He met here Mahākaccāyana for the first time and by converting him paved the way for the establishment of a centre of Buddhism in Avantī.

Mahākaccāyana was one of the most distinguished apostles of the Buddhist faith and made a substantial contribution to its prosperity. He

Mahākaccā yana, founder of the centre in Avantī. was the son of the royal priest of king Canda Pajjota of Avantī. He was the nephew of rṣi Asita (or Kāladevala) the great seer of the Vindhyācala who paid his homage to Siddhārtha when a child. It was at Asita's advice that the young ascetic Nālaka (former name of Mahākaccāyana) came to Benares to pay a visit to Buddha and being very much impressed by the unsurpassed erudition of the Teacher, became a Buddhist monk along with his companions<sup>2</sup>. This group of bhikkhus with Mahā-

I Vinaya III, p. 11. (From Benares, Buddha went to Vesāli where he spent his 13th vassa).

<sup>2</sup> Mahāvastu, II, p. 30; III, p. 382; Romantic History of Buddha (translated from the Chinese Abhiniskramaṇa Sūtra) by S. Beal, p. 276; Sutta Nipāta (P. T. S.), Nālaka Sutta, vs. 696ff.

kaccāyana as their head returned to their native country and founded āśramas there at Kurura-ghara-papāta-pabbata and Makkarakaṭa in Avantī. Of the notable converts made here, names of Puṇṇa, Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa of Aparānta, Isidatta a caravan guide of Velugāma, and Kaṇḍarāyaṇa brāhmaṇa may be mentioned¹. In the Thera- and Theri-Gāthā, we come across names of a few other monks and nuns of Avantī whose psalms have been preserved in the collection² and in the Majjhima Nikāya we meet with the conversion of king Madhura Avantiputta by Mahākaccāyana by delivering the famous discourse on caste-system after the parinibbāṇa of Buddha³.

A remarkable feature of the activities of Mahākaccāyana is that he as an expositor was engaged more in giving detailed expositions of Buddha's enigmatic sayings than delivering independent discourses of his own. People used to come to him for solving their doubts in regard to utterances of Buddha: Kālī upāsikā requested him to explain a stanza from Kumāripañha¹ of the Sutta Nipāta (i. p. 126), the Hāliddikāni gahapati from the Māgandiyapañha of the Aṭṭhakavagga and Sakkapañha Sutta of the Dīgha Nikāya (Sutta No. 21) and so forth².

I Psalms of the Brethren by Mrs. Rhys Davids; Ang. Nik., I, p. 68; Sam Nik., IV, p. 288.

<sup>2</sup> Psalms of the Brethren, pp. 41, 42, 107, 149, 292. Psalms of the Sisters, pp. 30, 31.

<sup>3</sup> Majjh. Nik., II, pp. 83ff.

It was under the guidance of Mahakaccāyana helped by Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa that Buddhism inspite of adverse circumstances³ gradually obtained a footing in Avanti. Though the country was situated at a long distance from Magadha, yet on account of its facilities of communication with the ports of Western India and the principal cities of Magadha and Kosala it became an important centre of Buddhism.

The centre of Buddhism in Avanti, it seems, laid special stress on the ascetic practices allowed by the Buddhist code for which it is remarked in the Vinaya that the bhikkhus of Avanti were followers of dhūtavāda precepts<sup>4</sup>.

Though names of western countries other than Avanti are not found in the Nikāyas, we come across in the Vinaya and Divyāvadāna Roruka and Aparānta as places where Buddhism spread during Buddha's life-time.

- I Ang. Nik., V, pp. 46ff.
- 2 Sam. Nik., III, pp. 12, 13; IV, p. 115.
- 3 Ang. Nik., III, p. 256.
- 4 Vinaya, CV., II, p. 299.

Rudrāyana, king of Roruka, first received through Bimbisara, the message of the advent of Buddha in Magadha. Bimbisāra sent him inscribed on a plate some of the principles of Buddhism which made a great impression upon Rudrāyana's mind, so Roruka. much so that he became a Buddhist upāsaka and afterwards a bhikkhu1.

The notable figure of Aparanta is Punna who belonged to Suppāraka, a port of Aparānta. His firm resolution to propagate Buddhism inspite of adverse circumstances was commended by Buddha, who on Aparanta. account of this sturdiness in the cause of the religion considered him the fittest person to be entrusted with the work of preaching there his religion2.

The B. NORTHERN COUNTRIES. farthest place in the North visited by Buddha in the course of his missionary tour was that of the Kurus,-the ancient home of the highest brāhmaņic culture. Buddha The land of delivered two important discourses the Kurus. in two of the brahmana villages of the country, namely, Kammāssadhamma and

<sup>1</sup> Divyāvadāna, pp. 550ff; Psalms of the Brethren, pp. 90-91.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., pp. 45ff., Ibid., p. 70.

Thullakotthita. The association of the country with these two discourses has made it memorable in the annals on the spread of Buddhism. These discourses are the Satipatthana Sutta and the Mahānidāna Suttanta1. The first deals with the first principles of the Buddhist system of yoga and teaches how a person can reach a very high stage of sanctification by the simple process of constant satipatthana (self-possession) without having recourse to the more arduous methods prescribed in the brāhmaņic yoga-śāstras. second discourse explains the ten-fold2 chain of causation (paticcasamuppāda) leading to misery or salvation. A few other discourses relating to the means of cessation of dukkha, worthlessness of sensual pleasures, the eight vimokkhas, etc. were also delivered at the place3.

It appears from the Ratthapāla and Māgandiya suttas of the Majjhima Nikāya that some of the brāhmaṇas of the Kuru country held Buddha in great esteem and resorted to him to listen to his teachings. So great was Bharadvājagotta brāhmaņa's respect for Buddha that he used to offer a seat to him in his sacrificial hall in the face of protests by Magandiya paribbājaka1. Raṭṭhapāla, a member of the most respectable brāhmaņa family of Thullakotthita approached Buddha along with a large number of brahmana gahapatis to listen to Buddha's discourses. Ratthapāla was so much impressed that he at once made up his mind to become a bhikkhu. He had some difficulty in having the consent of his parents to his ordination but ultimately he succeeded and became a bhikkhu. After the attainment of arahathood, he paid a visit to the land of his birth and made a great impression upon the mind of the Kuru king by giving an exposition of some of the principles of Buddhism2. Nikāyas do not mention any other convert of the Kuru country except Māgandiya paribbājaka who was at first so very averse to Buddhism3.

Majjh. Nik., I, pp. 55ff., Dīgh. Nik., II, pp. 55 ff; 290ff.

<sup>2</sup> In the chain the usual first two links have been omitted, and viññāna and nāmarūpa have been made co-existent instead of one being derived from the another. Cf. Sam. Nik., II, pp. 92-93; Mrs Rhys Davids' Buddhism, p. 94.

<sup>3</sup> Sam. Nik., II, p. 107; Ang. Nik., V, pp. 29ff.

Buddha had also among his disciples the Majjh. Nik., I, p. 502; cf. ante, II, pp. 55ff.

Majjh. Nik., II, pp. 65-72.

Ibid., I, p. 512.

WESTERN AND NORTHERN COU NTRIES

people of the more distant Madda country, the notable of them being the bhikkhu Mahākappina and the two bhikkhunis Khemā and Bhadda Kapilani. Buddha con-The land of the Maddas. verted Khemā, the queen of Bimbisara, in the seventh year of his missionary career after the institution of the order of nuns at Vesāli. She attained the highest stage of sanctification and was designated by Buddha as the chief of the highly wise nuns (mahāpañnanam)1. Her fame spread all over Magadha and Kosala as panditā, viyattā, medhāvinī, bahussutā, cittakathī, kalyānapatibhānā'tī (wise, experienced, intelligent and erudite)2. She had a discussion with Pasenadi Kosala on indeterminable problems and fully satisfied him by her expositions3. The conversion of Khemā opened up a new chapter in the history of Buddhism. Not only did it contribute to the popularity of the Buddhist order of nuns but also made easy the path of the spread of Buddhism in Sāgala, the capital of the Maddas4, sprung as she

I Ang Nik., I, p. 25; Manorothapurani, I, p. 345.

<sup>2</sup> Sam. Nik., IV, p. 375.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., pp. 375-380.

<sup>4</sup> Cunningham's Ancient Geography, (2nd ed.), pp. 206ff, 686.

SPREAD OF BUDDHISM

was from the royal dynasty of the Madda country. Besides Khemā the two other notable converts, who hailed from the Madda country, are Mahākappina of the royal family of Kukkuṭavatī, mentioned by Buddha as the chief of the bhikkhu ovādakānaṃ¹ (admonisher of bhikkhus) and Bhaddā Kapilāni of the chief of the Sāgala brāhmaṇa families and wife of Mahākassapa, referred to by Buddha as the foremost of the nuns who attained the knowledge of their previous births (pubbenivāsa-anussarantīnaṃ)².

<sup>1</sup> Manorathapūranī, I, pp. 318-324.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., pp. 375-6; Psalms of the Sisters, pp. 47-49.

BOOK II Schools of Buddhism

The

Evolution of the Schools of Buddhism

INTRODUCTION

The origin of the various schools, not long after Buddha's death, was rather a healthy sign of Tathagata's religion. After Buddha's death there was none at the time able to take his place as a religious teacher. His charming doctrine attracted thousands of men seeking eagerly a solution of the various problems relating to life in this world and the next. There were among these the highly learned followers who were descended from brahmana families and imbued with an intimate knowledge of brahmanic philosophy, learned members of various religious orders like the Jațilas, Jainas, Ajīvikas. They were of a very speculative turn of mind and could not remain satisfied with the then current interpretations of the teachings of Buddha as the common folk were, as a rule. These seekers after truth demanded a more thorough elucidation of the significant words of the Teacher, the leading Buddhist teachers of the time being unable to furnish explanation. Naturally these Buddhist preachers took to hair-splitting argumentations but could not arrive at definite conclusions. The fundamental propositions about which they all agreed were 1:—

- (1) All is momentary (sarvam kṣanikam)
- (2) All is without self (sarvam anātman)
- (3) All is suffering (sarvam dukkham)

But round this nucleus of agreement were ranged several divergences of opinion as to both tenets (dhamma) and rules of discipline (vinaya) which were responsible for divisions in the fraternity<sup>2</sup>. The development of the six systems of Hindu philosophy from the Upanisads as their common basis furnishes a parallel to the growth of schools of Buddhism out of a single original cult. "The founders of the Hindu schools" says Prof. Max Müller<sup>3</sup> "always pretend to find in the Upanisads some warranty for their tenets, however antagonistic in their bearing. The same applies to the numerous sects that have existed and still exist in India". This remark applies mutatis mutandis to the various Buddhist sects.

I D. T. Suzuki's Outlines of Mahāyāna Buddhism, p. 140 (Item 3 is not mentioned in this book).

<sup>2</sup> See Ang. Nik., I, p. 60.

<sup>3</sup> History of Sanskrit Literature, pp. 162, 163.

Each sect laid claim to the orthodoxy and special strength of its views and beliefs¹ by culling out and emphasizing those sayings of Buddha that lent support to its particular doctrines, while the sayings that were not so tractable or positively antagonistic were either impeached or passed over in silence.

The formation of about twenty Buddhist schools within one or two centuries

Factors peculiar to Buddhism for the origin of

The formation of about twenty Buddhist schools within one or two centuries or following the reign of Asoka was due mainly to the following factors:-

schools.

(1) Want of provision for the supreme headship of the Buddhist church after the Founder's death. Buddha thought that the prescription of heavy punishments for schisms in the church would check them effectively and that his Dhamma and Vinaya would be self-sufficing in keeping intact the religion established by him, obviating thereby the appointment of religious heads. In this supposition the Teacher no doubt delimited the need for the supreme headship, as the future history of the Buddhist church has proved, and magnified the unaided strength of dhamma and vinaya. According to the Samagāma Sutta<sup>1</sup>, Buddha hears of dissensions in the Jaina community as soon as the leader Nigantha Nātaputta was dead. He was afraid of like dissensions in his church after his death but consoled himself that there was no difference of opinion among his followers in regard to the dhamma2 preached by him and to ensure further safety of his church (in this behalf), he delivered a religious discourse on the cause of schism and the means to avoid them3. He placed too much reliance on his dhamma and the attachment of his followers to his dhamma and vinaya which he supposed would be of the implicit

I For illustrations, see Points of the Controversy by Mr. Shwe Zan Aung, pp. 27 ff.

I Majjh. Nik., II, p. 105.

2 Buddha's dhamma is thus detailed by him :-(i) Four satipatthanas; (ii) Four sammappadhanas; (iii) Four iddhipādas; (iv) Five indriyas; (v) Five balas; (vi) Seven bojjhangas; (vii) Eight-fold path. See Digh. Nik., xvi, 50; Majjh. Nik., II, pp. 77, 103, 104; Lalitavistara (Bibl. Ind.), a book of the Sarvāstivādins, pp. 34-37; and Sangiti-Paryaya, one of the seven Abhidharma books of the Sarvāstivādins in J. P. T. S. 1904-5, pp. 71, 75.

3 See Kinti Sutta in Majjh. Nik., II, p. 103.

type for ever1. He instructed his disciples that after his death his teachings would be their Teacher. This is recorded in the Mahaparinibbana Suttanta2 and forms also the subject of a dialogue between Ananda and Vassakāra brāhmaņa, the minister of Magadha<sup>3</sup>. Vassakāra asks Ānanda, "Has any bhikkhu been specified (by Buddha) as would after Buddha's death become the refuge (i. e. leader) of men under whom everybody would seek shelter." Ananda answers in the negative. He asks again, "Has any bhikkhu been selected by the sangha as would become their leader etc." To this also Ananda answers in the negative. Vassakāra was curious to learn the cause of the prevailing concord of the church inspite of there being no leader (lit. refuge). Ananda replies "we are not without a refuge (appațisaranā), dhamma is our refuge. There is a treatise called Pātimokkha which has been formulated by the omniscient Teacher and which all the monks living in the same parish (gāmakkhetta) have

26

I See Pāsādika Suttanta, (Digh. Nik., xxix), p. 121.

<sup>2</sup> Dīgh. Nik., xvi, 6, 6, 1. "Yo mayā Dhammo ca Vinayo desito paññatto so va mama accayena satthā."

<sup>3</sup> Majjh. Nik., Gopaka-Moggalāna Sutta (No. 108); Oldenberg's Buddha (Eng. transl.), p. 108.

to recite in a monastery where they assemble on the uposatha days. Should there occur any difference or doubt in the recitation, the bhikkhus present should explain them accordance with the dhamma (hence they have their refuge as dhamma)." In answer to another question put by Vassakāra, Ānanda explains that though there was no supreme head of the Buddhist fraternity, there was in each parish a qualified head who was respected by the people under his charge and whose guidance would be strong enough to keep the great many parishes connected together in religious concord. This conversation makes it clear that each parish seniormost was under the control of the and best qualified monk that the parish could furnish1. The bhikkhus residing under his superintendence met together on the uposatha days and held religious discussions among themselves in order to elicit the true

In the Mahāparinibbāṇa Suttanta (Dīgh. Nik., II, p. 77) it is enjoined upon the bhikkhus that they should offer due respect to the Sangha-pitara or Sangha-parināyaka (the head of the parish) who are bhikkhus of long standing and experience for the well-being of this sangha.

Childers in his Pāli-Dictionary (s. v. sangha) says that a Sanghatthera is usually selected as the President meaning of Buddha's words. In the course of their discussions, they interpreted the terse expressions of the Teacher in different ways and introduced additional materials in the interpretations, passing them in the name of Buddha to give them stamp of authenticity. This happened in most of the parishes scattered over the whole of northern India. There was none at that time in the whole of the Buddhist community who could dissolve the numberless divergences thus originated into one uniform whole and convert the threatening centrifugal forces then at work into centripetal, conducive to the well-being of the whole sangha.

(2) Grouping of disciples around a noted thera. Buddha awarded prominence to some of his disciples by extolling them for their attainment of proficiency in certain branches of the Buddhist dhamma<sup>1</sup>. Of them, the following of an assembly. He cites, for instance, Kassapa, the then Sanghatthera was the President of the first council. He also points out that a Sanghatthera is not always the one who is the longest ordained for Sabbakāmin who was the longest upasampanna bhikkhu was not the President of the Second Council. See also Ang, Nik., IV, 21; V, p. 353.

I Ang. Nik., I. xiv, I.

need mention for our purpose,-

(i) Sāriputta, the foremost of the highly wise (mahāpaññānam)

- (ii) Mahāmoggalāna, the foremost of the possessors of miraculous powers (iddhimantānam).
- (iii) Anuruddha, the foremost of the possessors of divine eyes (dibba-cakkhu-kānam).
- (iv) Mahākassapa, the foremost of the followers of  $dh\bar{u}t\alpha$  precepts  $(dh\bar{u}t\alpha v\bar{a}-d\bar{u}n\alpha m)$ .
- (v) Punna Mantāniputta, the foremost of the preachers of dhamma (dhammaka-thikānam).
- (vi) Mahākaccāyana, the foremost of the expositors (sankhittena bhāsitam vitthārena attham vibhajjanantānam).
- (vii) Rāhula, the foremost of the students (sikkhākāmānam)
- (viii) Revata Khadiravaniya, the foremost of the forest-recluses (ārañnikānam).
  - (ix) Ananda, the foremost of the vastly learned (bahussutānam); and
  - (x) Upāli, the foremost of the masters of Vinaya (vinayadharānam).

Buddha used to observe the mental proclivities of the person to whom he imparted a religious lesson and selected a discourse that appealed to him most. He followed the same course, while prescribing to his disciples their duties for the attainment of arabathood. also indirectly pointed out to his disciples the preceptor most suited to each in view of his peculiar mental leanings. This practice led to the grouping of students around a teacher or his direct disciples; hence the remark made by Buddha that "dhātuso sattā samsandenti samenti"1 on the principle that like draws like. In the Majjhima Nikāya2, we read of ten chief theras, viz. Sāriputta, Moggalāna, Mahākotthita, etc., each having ten to forty disciples under their tuition. Buddha on a certain occasion pointed out that the group of bhikkhus formed round each of these theras was possessed of the same special qualifications that characterised the thera himself. Thus the bhikkhus accompaying Sāriputta were mahāpaññāvantā, those accompanying Mahāmoggalāna were mahiddhikā, those accompanying Mahākassapa were dhūtavādā, those accompanying Devadatta were sinfully inclined (pāpicchā) and so on<sup>3</sup>. Yuan Chwang noticed about a thousand years later that on auspicious days the Abhidhammikas worshipped Sāriputra, Vinayists Upāli, the Śrāmaņeras Rāhula, the Sūtraists Purna Maitrāyanīputra, the Samādhists Mahāmoggalāna, the bhikkhuṇīs Ānanda, the Mahāyānists Mañjuśrī and other Bodhisattvas1. In the first four classes of bhikkhus. the aforesaid affinity between them and their leaders is obvious. In the next three classes, the affinity existed all the same though it may not be apparent on the face of it. For the Samadhists followed Mahāmoggalāna because he was the master of iddhi par excellence which could be obtained only through samādhi, and the bhikkhunis followed Ananda because to him the order of nuns owed its origin. The Mahāyānists do not come within our purview at present. The principal points of resemblance between the followers and their preceptors were the ties that bound them together but these were the points which constituted the features by which the chief qualities of the preceptors were distinguished. These distinctions among them did not lie in any differences of doctrines which they professed but in the degrees of proficiency attained by each, in particular directions of Buddhistic sādhana. But the divisions though not proceeding from radical differences in doctrine grew stereotyped in course of time, and fusion between them later on became an impossibility due to the separatist frame of of mind that their existence as separate orders naturally developed. Thus the division which had commenced without any doctrinal differences gradually gave rise to the latter and grew into full-fledged schools. History shows that this process of develoment actually came to pass. For instance, the school of the Sarvāstivādins who were connected with the original division of abhidhammikas with Sāriputta at their head affiliated themselves to Sāriputta's disciple Rāhula at whose time however the doctrinal differences had not yet appeared, similarly the Sthaviravādins affiliated themselves to Upāli, Mahāsanghikas to Mahākassapa and the Sammitīya to Mahākaccāyana.

I Sam. Nik., II, p. 157.

<sup>2</sup> Majjh. Nik., III, p. 118.

<sup>3</sup> Sam. Nik., II, pp. 155, 156.

I Watters' Yuan Chwang, I, p. 302.

(3) Division of monks into bodies, each of which was meant to preserve a particular portion of the Buddhist scriptures. Throughout the Pāli literature, we often come across terms like these:—

(i) Suttantikas or masters of Suttanta (belonging to the Sutta-pitaka):

(ii) Vinayadharas or repositories of the rules of discipline:

SCHOOLS OF BUDDHISM

208

(iii) Mātikādharas or those versed in mātikā (i. e. abhidhamma);

(iv) Dhammakathikas or the preachers of the Buddhist doctrine; 1

(v) Dīgha-bhāṇaka, Majjhima-bhāṇaka &c., (i. e. reciters of the Nikāyas)<sup>2</sup>.

The object of this is obvious. In those days, when writing was hardly used for recording in books the sayings and preachings of Buddha, the means that was utilized for preserving and handing them down to posterity was reciting them regularly and committing them to memory. This was akin to the method that had been in vogue in India from the earliest Vedic period, the need of which mainly gave rise to the numerous Vedic schools. A similar cause produced a similar result among the Buddhists and we find that the memorizing of different portions of the Pitaka was entrusted to different sets of bodies hardened and separated from one another in course of time and bearing names descriptive of their functions3.

<sup>1</sup> Dīgh. Nik., Mahāparinibbāņa Suttanta, iv; Ang. Nik., II, p. 117.

<sup>2</sup> Sum. Vil., p. 15.

<sup>3</sup> Vinaya, IV. 15. 4. (S. B. E. xiii, p. 339). "On the Pavāraņā day the greater part of the night has passed

INTRODUCTION

It should not be inferred from this that side by side with these bodies, there were not religious students who specialised in a number of branches of the Buddhist scriptures and received epithets āgatāgamā, bahussutā, tipetakin, pañcanekāyika. But the existence of such scholars with such wider scopes of knowledge does not preclude that of bodies of scholars having as their special duties an accurate memorising of special branches of the sacred lore. This is confirmed. and that its origin dates back as early as the first council is evidenced, by the fact that in that council Ananda was requested to recite the Suttas while Upāli the Vinaya. This would not have been the case if Ananda or Upāli was not generally famed for proficiency in the particular branches of the Pitaka. Elements of such specialisation have found to have existed still earlier in Buddha's life-time as can be noticed in a quarrel that took place away while the bhikkhus were in confusion: the bhikkhus were reciting the Dhamma, those versed in Suttantas were propounding the Suttantas, those versed in Vinaya were discussing the Vinaya, the Dhamma preachers were talking about the Dhamma".

between a dhammakathika and a vinayadhara1.

I See Infra.

27

Commonness of duties gave rise to unity among dhammakathikas on one side and the vinayadharas on the other in such a marked way that each group made the cause of one individual member its common cause and participated in the dispute. This is sufficiently indicative of the crystallization that had commenced each group round its common function and the awakening of a consciousness of common interests that bound together its individual Indications of stages previous to this members. crystallization into bodies are found in the Vinaya in connection with the arrangements made by Dabba Mallaputta for the residence of the bhikkhus1. Dabba Mallaputta made such an arrangement that the bhikkhus adopting the same mode of life (sabhāgā) resided in the same place in order that the Suttantikas could recite among themselves, Vinayadharas discuss the rules of discipline with one another, the Dhammakathikas talk mutually about questions of doctrine and so on. Instances are not rare of a feeling of rivalry among these bodies, each member of which wished and was pleased to see the body to which he belonged take precedence over other bodies in having seat or food in assemblies or in thanksgiving after a meal<sup>1</sup>.

I Vinaya, II, pp. 75, 76.

These separate bodies, which existed for a particular function necessary for the whole Buddhist community e.g. the preservation of a particular portion of the Pitaka by regular recitations, imbibed in course of time, doctrines, which could be looked upon as peculiar to the body holding them and in this way, the body developed into a separate religious school of Buddhism. Such instances are found in the Theravadins who had developed into such a school from the Vinayadharas, and the Sautrantikas from the Suttantikas. It must not be thought that all the divisions mentioned above in this connection developed into religious schools, but what I mean to point out is the fact that such divisions supplied from among them bodies which in time grew into full-fledged schools.

(4) Elasticity of the rules of discipline. The rules of conduct were in the course of being defined but were not codified at the time. The Sākyaputtiya samanas like other contemporary religious orders possessed a set of rules known as the Pātimokkha for their guidance and the disciples had to recite those rules every fortnight in the presence of the congregation, the bhikkhus residing in forests (āraññakas) not being excepted1. The Pātimokkha, as we have it now, obtained its present shape after various additions and alterations according to the exigencies of times and circumstances. For instance, Buddha made some exceptions in favour of the bhikkhus who were placed at a disadvantage by reason of the locality in which they resided. In the border countries (paccantima janapada) such as Avanti, the converts were few and intractable, hence, Buddha at the request of Kaccayana and Punna Mantāniputta made some exceptions in their favour in regard to the rules for the formation of an assembly for the ordaining of monks and the wearing of leather-made shoes etc., prohibited to the bhikkhus dwelling in the middle country2. Buddha's primary object was the emancipation of all beings and as a means to that end, he laid the greatest stress on the control of mental functions1 permitting greater latitudes in the discipline of body and speech according to the circumstances of each individual than were allowed by the contemporaneous sects of Jainas, Ajīvikas, etc. In the Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta2, one of his instructions was that the sangha might, if necessary, abolish the minor rules, making thereby the Vinaya (or rules of conduct) subject to changes as time and circumstances required3. Besides elasticity, there were other causes for changes in the Vinaya rules, one of which was hinted at by the Chinese traveller Fa Hian in the course of his remarks bearing on the Mahasanghika schism: "Certain bhikkhus (of Vaisāli) broke the rules of Vinaya in ten particulars saying that Buddha had said it so"4. Another cause of such

<sup>1</sup> Vinaya, CV. IV, 6, 2; MV. IV, 15, 4.

<sup>1</sup> Majjh. Nik., II, pp. 8, 9. "Te (āraññakā sāvakā) anvaddhamāsam sanghamajjhe osaranti pātimokkhuddesāya".

<sup>2</sup> See Vinaya, I, pp. 197, 198; Divyāvadāna, p. 21.

I Majjh. Nik., Vol. I, p. 56.

<sup>2</sup> Dīgh. Nik., II, p. 154. "Ākankhamāno Ānanda sangho mama accayena khuddānukhuddāni sikkhāpadāni samuhantu". Cf. Milindapanha, p. 143.

<sup>3</sup> Ang. Nik., I p. 230. Vajjiputtaka bhikkhu said to Buddha that it would be difficult for him to practise the 250 rules which were recited every fortnight. Buddha asked him whether he would be able to practise the three sikṣās viz. adhisīla, adhicitta and adhipaññā, to which he replied in the affirmative.

<sup>4</sup> Beal's Records of the Western Countries, I, p. liv.

Time

division is mentioned in a Sanskrit treatise as lying in the fact that the seceders sought "different interpretations for the commandments of the departed master"1.

Profs. Beal and Minayeff<sup>2</sup>, the practice of preserving the sacred lore in one's own vernacular contributed also to the formation of schools. At present, evidences are not strong enough to put this conclusion on a solid basis and we are now not in a position to point to any particular school as the result of the operation of this factor alone.

known from Buddha's life that his attainment of Buddhahood led him to adopt 'middle path' which eschewed austerities as a means of attaining religious goal. We are also aware that just after his renunciation he became a disciple of two gurus under whose guidance he led a life of severe austerity for a few years which only opened his eyes to the fact that such austerities could never fulfil his mission. For this reason austerities could not be expected to figure in the doctrines preached and recommended by him to his disciples. But in spite of this position we find in some of the earliest portions of the Pitaka such as the Majjhima and the Anguttara Nikāyas that Buddha is praising ascetics1 who were given to the practice of dhūta-precepts2 involving austerities. This is an inconsistency which can be explained in two ways, first, by holding that the passages were interpolated in later times by those disciples who were in favour of such practices, and secondly, by the position that Buddha changed his attitude later on in view of the strong tendency of the people who took to or believed in the efficacy of the austerities and who could not be satisfied with a religion barren of such practices. In either case, we have to admit that austerities crept into Buddhism in early times and the adoption of these by Buddhists led to the formation of schools.

I Rockhill's Life of the Buddha, p. 177.

<sup>2</sup> Minayess's Intro. to Pāli Grammar; Beal's Abstract of four Lectures on the Buddhist Literature in China, p. 49.

Likewise ritualism which Buddha from the commencement of his career as such eschewed as a thing with which the religion preached by him should have no connection could not be kept in abeyance for a long time. The passages 1 found in the early portions of the Piţaka advocating certain rites may, like the references to austerities, be explained in the way indicated above. Whatever might be the explanation, it is certain that by degrees rites and ceremonies entered into Buddhism giving it an appearance which could in no way be distinguished from the elaborate rituals of brahmanic worships barring of course differences in the rituals themselves. The introduction of this feature could not certainly have been welcome to the founder of the religion but it was a feature that was demanded in an increasing degree by the large mass of the laity as well as by a great body of their religious teachers. The schools or groups of Buddhists that adopted the rituals naturally fell apart from those that did not do so and ritualism was taken as a feature. distinguishing certain schools from the rest.

I Ang. Nik., III, pp. 344ff.

<sup>2</sup> See Kern's Manual of Buddhism, pp. 75-76.

The above factors have been generalised from the history of the Buddhist church during the three and half centuries after Buddha's death, and have been mentioned as the chief ones that led to dissensions, and development of schools. It is clear from Buddha's sayings that he had apprehension for future dissensions among his followers. He often laid stress upon the importance of samaggā parisā<sup>1</sup> i. e. the unity of the Buddha's apprehension for future dissension among monks, and the remedies.

<sup>1</sup> See Digh. Nik., Mahāparinibbāņa Suttanta.

Buddhist monks as the means of keeping it strong and uninjured in the face of oppositions made by its opponents in various ways. To remedy the evil of breaches in their own camp, he charged his favourite disciples Ānanda, Sāriputta and Moggalna<sup>2</sup> ā with the duty of settling disputes whenever they took place among the monks in order that it might be nipped in the bud. In his opinion it was only the wicked and selfish bhikkhus who achieved their selfish ends by introducing new principles of Dhamma and Vinaya which proved sources of heated contentions<sup>3</sup>. He was however not very particular in regard to existence of differences in abhidhamma (i.e. atireka-dhamma or minor points of doctrine)<sup>4</sup>, ajjhājīva (minor rules of ivelihood), andl adhipātimokkha (minor rules of discipline), which he regarded as inevi-

28

<sup>1</sup> Dīgh. Nik., Mahāparinibbāņa Suttanta, p. 76; Ang. Nik., I, p. 243; II, p. 70; IV, p. 21.

<sup>2</sup> Ang. Nik., II, p. 239.

<sup>3 1</sup>bid., V, pp. 73, 75.

<sup>4</sup> See Atthasālini, p. 2.

table in all religions1. When it was necessary to check the currency of dissentient views with regard to doctrine, a neutral bhikkhu was sent to a sane and reasonable member belonging to the party which held the views in order to convert him to the orthodox opinion and if the attempt failed no other steps need be taken2. As regards the other two classes of differences just mentioned, there were punishments3 to check them but as they have no bearing on the present subject they may be passed over. To stimulate the bhikkhus to stand united, he held out before them the prospect of a happy and glorious life like that of god Brahmā that will fall to a monk's lot to lead in after-life as the result of any act of his that served to re-unite bodies of monks separated from one another, while he declared the monk sowing dissension among his brethren as doomed to perdition for a kalpa4.

Every quarrel or difference of opinion among the bhikkhus was not characterised by Buddha as sanghabheda. A breach in the sangha

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Points of the Controversy, p. 351.

<sup>2</sup> Majjh. Nik., II, p. 238.

<sup>3</sup> See Adhikaranasamathas in Vinaya, CV. IV, 14.

<sup>4</sup> Ang. Nik., V, pp. 73, 75, 78; Vinaya, Cv. vii, 5.

accompanied by the conditions laid down in the Vinaya was designated sanghabheda. It is thus described in the Vinaya, "For not only is a formal putting forward and voting on the false doctrine essential to schism as distinct from mere disagreement, but the offending bhikkhus must also be quite aware that the doctrine so put forth is wrong, or at least doubtful, and also that the schism resulting from his action will be or will probably be disastrous to the Dhamma. In other words, the schism must be brought about by deliberately putting forward a doctrine known to be false, or at least doubtful, or with the express intention or hope of thereby injuring the Dhamma" 1. This definition obviously represents the opinion of the conservative school of the Theravadins who naturally looked down upon those who differed from them on religious points and ascribed an evil motive to their entertainment of the differing views. It is very reasonable that the dissenters may have an honest belief on their own views clear of the evil motive of injuring the Dhamma. It will, therefore, be apparent from a neutral standpoint that evil intention is not essential of sanghabheda. The real essentials are :- (1) Belief in a dissentient religious view regarding either one or more points of faith or discipline; (2) the entertainment of the view by eight or more than eight fully ordained monks; (3) the division taken among the aforesaid eight or more monks must show a majority on the side of the dissenters<sup>1</sup>.

I Vinaya Texts (S. B. E.), pt. III, p. 271n.

The conditions as laid down in the Vinaya, leading to a sanghabheda; and how it is distinguished from sangharāji.

Sangharāji is a disunion confined to eight monks. This restriction as to number forming the essential of sangharāji shows that it might at any moment develop into a sanghabheda, by drawing an additional monk into the difference. Of course, bonafide belief and the full ordainment of monks are necessary requisites.

During Buddha's life-time dissensions of minor character took place in the Buddhist sangha, only two of which attracted his attention and which were called by him sanghabheda and condemned to be as heinous a crime as

I Vinaya, CV. VII, 5, I; Milindāpañha, p. 108: "No layman can create a schism, nor a sister of the order, nor one under preparatory instruction, nor a novice of either sex. It must be a bhikkhu under no disability, who is in full communion and co-resident" (S. B. E., vol. xxxv, p. 163), patricide or matricide<sup>1</sup>. The first dissension occurred at one of the monasteries of Kosambī<sup>2</sup> where a bhikkhu through ignorance of the law committed

Germs of dissensions in the fraternity during Buddha's life-time; (i) Division at Kosambi. a breach of discipline. The monks attached a magnified gravity to the offence and punished him by ukkhepana (excommunication). The accused, on the other hand, attributed the offence to his ignorance of the law which did not deserve the severe penalty inflicted on him. The justice of the cause gained for him several adherents who worked to have his penalty set aside. This caused a division not only among the monks but also among the lay-devotees and ultimately led to Buddha's mediation before the differences could be settled. This dissension, it is true, did not last long owing to the presence of the Teacher who removed the doubts of both the parties by his lucid explanations but yet it argues the existence of germs of dissension which bore fruits of farreaching importance in later times.

I Vinaya, MV. x, 3, I; Kathāvatthu, xiii, I.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., Mv. x; Majjh. Nik., I, Kosambī-Sutta; Dhammapada Atthakathā, Kosambī-vatthu.

The next dissension originated with Buddha's cousin, Devadatta, who in his advocacy for more austere discipline requested the Teacher to introduce the following five rules in the monasteries:—

(The brethren) shall (1) live all their life in the forest;

- (2) subsist solely on doles collected out-doors;
- (3) dress themselves in rags picked out of dust heaps;
- (4) dwell always under treeand never under a roof; and(5) never eat fish or flesh.

The Teacher declared that he could not make the rules obligatory upon all the monks on the ground that it would conduce more to their welfare to make the observance of these rules optional. Devadatta took this opportunity to create a division in the sangha (congregation) and departed to Gayāsīsa with five hundred followers.

We have reason to believe that this secession of Devadatta from the original brotherhood gave birth to sects which existed up to the end of the fourth century A. D. 1 and a remnant of whose practices was found by Yuan Chwang to be in three sanghārāmas in Karnasuvarņa. The two foregoing instances of division in the sangha during Buddha's life-time illustrate that the Buddhist church could not keep itself intact inspite of his personality and sublime teachings.

<sup>1</sup> Vinaya, Cv. VIII, 1; Jātakas, I, p. 34; Oldenberg's Buddha (Hoey's transl.), pp. 160, 161.

Within the period of Buddha's ministry which covered less than half a century and the few localities to which Buddhism was confined at the time, the various forces were already at work for the formation of schools. It can therefore be well imagined that in the absence of the great Teacher, the monastic order, which though well-organized with precautions against schisms, had to give way to the growth of as many as twenty schools or more. The appended charts shows the number of schools and the way in which the united church of Buddha gradually become subdivided. The time of emergence of

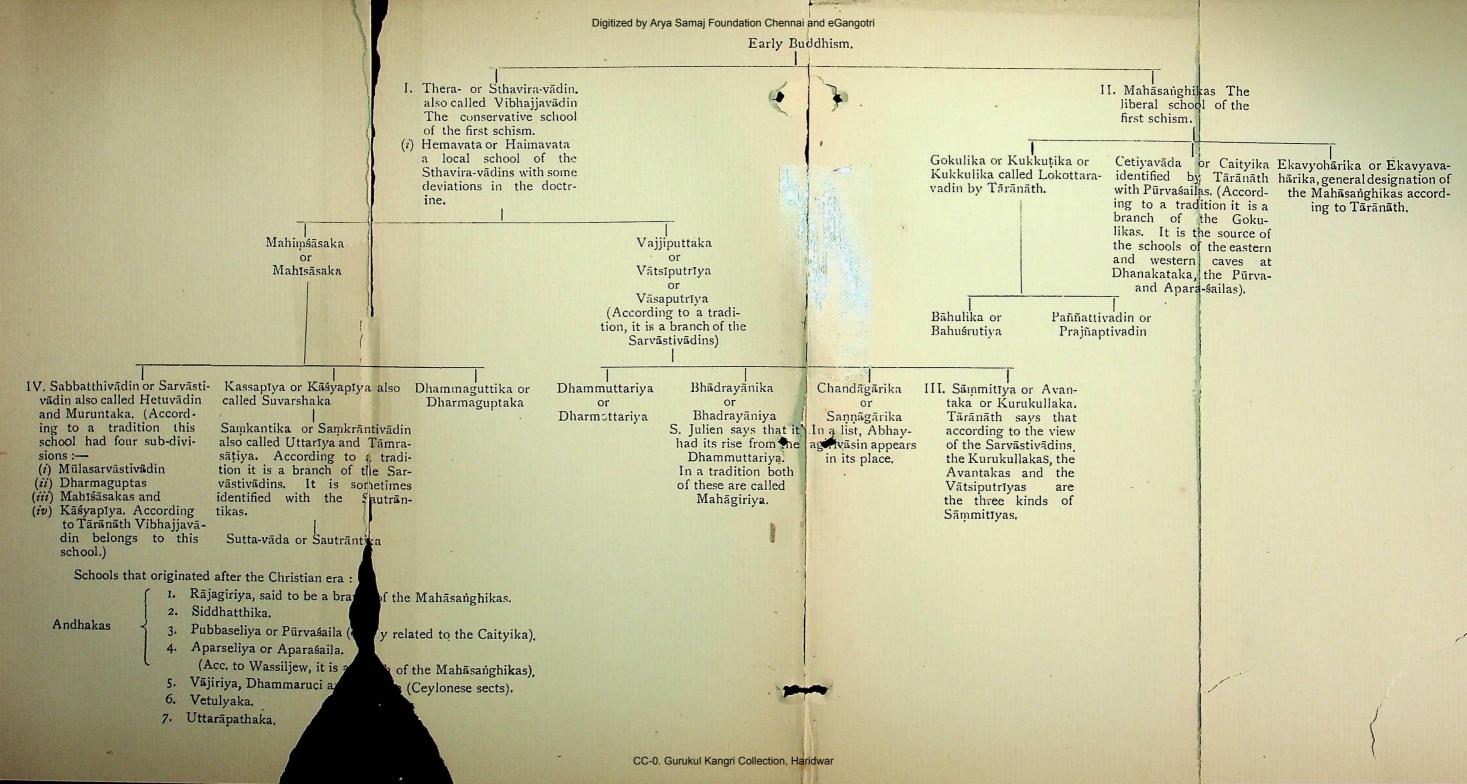

I Beal's Records of the Western Countries, vol II.

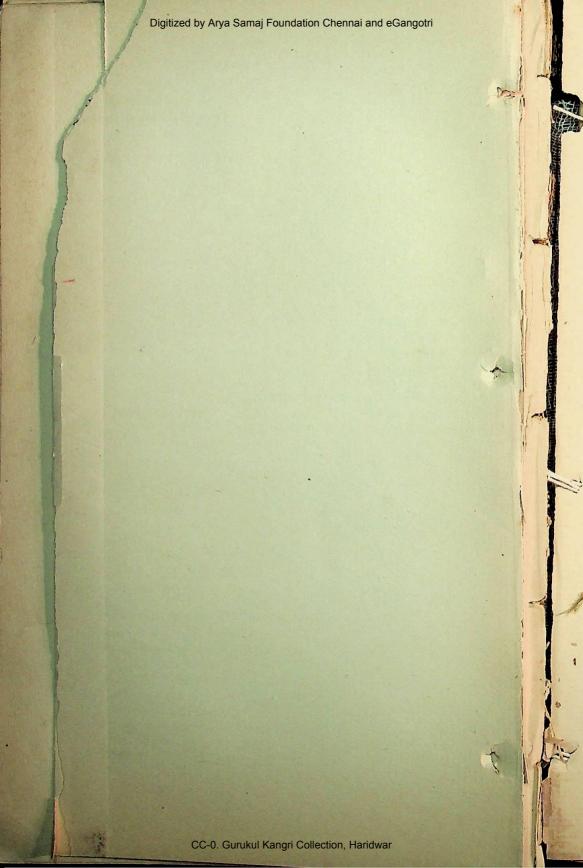

<sup>2</sup> This chart is based mainly upon the tradition as preserved in the Pāli works. I have used Rockhill's Life of the Buddha, Mrs. Rhys Davids' Points of the Controversy and Prof. Geiger's valuable Appendix B to his Translation of the Mahāvaṃsa where all the references to the varying lists of schools have been collected and arranged.

SCHOOLS OF BUDDHISM

224

the schools cannot be definitely specified at present. Mrs. Rhys Davids has tried in her Introduction to the Points of the Controversy to assign an approximate date to the origin of each school on the strength of the Ceylonese traditions. Some of the conclusions drawn by her require however further corroboration to put them beyond the range of doubt.

The Mahasanghika School

It was about a century after Buddha's death that we meet with the great division in the Buddhist church, a division between the conservative and the liberal, the hierarchic and the democratic. It is in this division that germs are traceable of the Mahāyānic doctrines which in the later history of Buddhism gained ground and eclipsed the Hīnayānic schools. Details about this schism are found in the Ceylon chronicles1 as well as in Pāli² and Buddhist Sanskrit works3 (extant in Tibetan and Chinese translations) which unanimously record that a schism occurred in the Church through the Vajjian monks who deviated from the orthodox rules of discipline in regard to ten points and instituted a new school under the name of Mahāsanghikas. We learn

I Mahāvamsa, Ch.IV; Dīpavamsa, Ch. IV, pp. 33ff.

<sup>2</sup> Vinaya Texts (S. B. E.), Vol. III, pp. 389-414.

<sup>3</sup> Rockhill's Life of the Buddha, pp. 173ff. for the version of the school of Sarvāstivādins (translated from Tibetan); Beal's Four Lectures on the Buddhist Literature in China, pp. 83ff. for the version of the school of Dharmaguptas (translated from Chinese).

further from the Kathāvatthu<sup>1</sup> of Moggaliputta Tissa and the Samavadhoparaca cakra<sup>2</sup> of Vasumitra that the school had also a number of tenets which were peculiar to itself. The Schism of the Mahā-saṅghikas. ten points<sup>3</sup>, which the Theravādins considered as breaches of the rules of discipline which caused the conflict between them and the Mahāsanghikas are :--

- (1) Singilona kappa—or the practice of carrying salt in a horn for use when needed, which contravened according to one view the rule against the storing of articles of food (Pācittiya 38).
- (2) Dvangula kappa—or the practice of taking food after midday, lit. when the shadow (of the dial) is two digits wide (Pāc. 37).
- (3) Gāmantara kappa—or the practice of going to a neighbouring village and taking a second meal there the same day, committing thereby the offence of over-eating (Pāc. 35).
- (4)  $\bar{A}v\bar{a}sa$  kappa—or the observance of uposathas in different places within the same parish  $(s\bar{\imath}m\bar{a})$  (MV. II, 8, 3).
- I See Mrs. Rhys Davids' Points of the Controversy, p. xix.
  - 2 Transl. by Prof. Wassilief in his Der Buddhismus.
  - 3 Vinaya, CV. XII, I, 10; 2. 9. Cf. Rockhill, op.

- (5) Anumati kappa—or doing an act and obtaining sanction for it afterwards (MV. IX, 3. 5).
- (6) Āciṇṇa kappa—or the use of precedents as authority.
- (7) Amathita kappa—or the drinking of milk-whey after meal (Pāc. 35).
- (8)  $Jalogip\bar{a}tum$ —or the drinking of fermenting palm-juice which as not yet toddy ( $P\bar{a}c.$  51).
- (9) Adasakam nisīdanam—or the use of a borderless sheet to sit on (Pāc. 89).
- (10)  $Jatar \bar{u}parajatam$ —or the acceptance of gold and silver (Nissagg. 18)<sup>1</sup>.

The above ten points as given in the Pāli and other texts are also stated by Yuan Chwang in his account of the Council at Vesāli. A remarkable difference between Yuan Chwang's cit., pp. 171, 172 and Beal, op. cit., pp. 83-94.

I For a discussion on the interpretations of the terms, see Minayeff, Recherches, I, pp. 44-50.

The first three rules seem to be relaxations of stringent rules, made by Buddha regarding the storage of food and eating to suit the conditions created by famine in Vesāli. The people of Vesāli continued to observe the relaxed rules though they were abrogated later on by the Theravādins in their Vinaya.

account and the traditions in the Pali and other texts is noticeable in connection with the Mahasanghikas at the meeting of the Council at Vesāli. According to the former, the Mahāsanghikas renounced all their deviations from the orthodox rules and took to those that were approved by the Theravadins, while according to the latter, the seceders did not in practice adopt the rules which they should have done according to the decisions of the council, in which they were outvoted. Inspite of their defeat, they remained as stubborn as before and asserted their separateness from the Theravadins by convening a council of their own. Watters disbelieves the tradition of the texts and relies on Yuan Chwang's account as true, and Kern also arrives at the same conclusion after comparing the various traditions1.

The Kathāvatthu, which received its final shape in Asoka's council, had been growing by accretions since the holding of the council at Vesāli<sup>2</sup>. This work attributes a few differences in tenets to the Mahāsanghika school. Bhavya, Vasumitra, Vinītadeva and Tārānātha trace the

I Kern's Manual, p. 109; Watters' Yuan Chwang, II, pp. 75-77.

<sup>2</sup> See Points of the Controversy, pp. xxxi ff.

- "(1) An arahat may commit a sin under unconscious temptation.
  - (2) One may be an arahat and not know it.
- (3) An arahat may have doubts on matters of doctrine.
- (4) One cannot attain arahatship without the aid of a teacher.
- (5) 'The noble ways' may begin with a shout that is, one meditating seriously on religion may make such exclamation as "How sad" and by so doing attain progress towards perfection."

The first four of the above articles of faith have been found in the Kathāvatthu², the commentary of which states them to have been held by the two branches of the Mahāsaṅghika school known as the Pubbaseliyas and Aparaseliyas³. Prof. Poussin after examining the works of Bhavya, Vasumitra and others sums up, regarding the five articles of faith, thus,—"Several traditions indicate that there was a council concerning the five points, and that this

<sup>1</sup> J. R. A. S., 1910, p. 416.

<sup>2</sup> Kathāvatthu, ii, 2; ii, 3, 1 (ii, 1, 5); ii, 4; ii, 6.

<sup>3</sup> Kathāvatthuppakaraņa Atthakathā, see the references noted above.

230

controversy was the origin of the Mahāsanghika sect1." Yuan Chwang relates that Mahādeva enunciated five dogmas, as enumerated above, which formed the subject of bitter controversy among the bhikkhus. At the instance of the reigning king, an assembly of arahats and nonarahats was summoned, in which the arahats voted against the five dogmas2 whereas the inferior brethren sided with Mahādeva and started the Mahāsanghika school at Pāṭaliputra3. This testimony of the Chinese traveller regarding the ten points of the breaches of the rules of discipline and the five dogmas of Mahādeva goes a very great way to prove that a schism did happen in the Buddhist church at or about the time of the second Buddhist Council. The agreement between Vasumitra's work and the Kathāvatthu in regard to the essential tenets of the Mahāsanghika school proves beyond doubt that the school existed before the time of composition of the Kathāvatthu, i.e., at or about the time of the Second Council.

I J. R. A. S., 1910, p. 414.

<sup>2</sup> They were the adherents of the Sthaviravada school which a few years later branched off into many schools of which the Sarvastivadins were the foremost.

<sup>3</sup> Watters' Yuan Chwang, I, pp. 268, 269.

The two classes of tradition preserved in

Two traditions for the origin of the schism accounted for.

the Buddhist literature, one attributing the schism of the Mahāsanghikas to the ten points of the breaches of the rules of discipline, and the other to Mahādeva's five articles of faith, may be accounted for in this way: The former appears in the Ceylonese chronicles and various versions of the Vinaya, while the latter in the Tibetan and Chinese versions of later Buddhist Sanskrit books dealing with the history of schools. One feature deserves our attention in this matter, namely, that in some works the differences as to the rules of discipline alone are referred to, while in other works the differences in regard to the doctrines to the exclusion of those regarding the rules of discipline are recorded. This can be accounted for, perhaps, either by the particular leanings of the authors of those works, or by the exclusive nature of the subject with which the works were concerned; for instance, the various versions of the Vinaya mention only the differences as to the points of discipline, and the Ceylonese chronicles composed by the Ceylonese bhikkhus whose principal care was for the Vinaya rules1 put aside matters of doctrine, while the later Buddhist Sanskrit writers confine themselves to doctrines alone. Yuan Chwang was for the first time interested in the record of divergences in regard to both discipline and faith; and that was because as an annalist he was more catholic than either of the two classes of authors. It should, however, be borne in mind that very probably the schism with the Mahāsanghikas had its first beginnings in the breaches of the then current rules of discipline encroaching in course of time on matters of doctrine.

<sup>1</sup> Watters' Yuan Chwang, II, p. 234.

The principal objective of the Mahāsanghikas in seceding from the main body of orthodox Buddhists becomes apparent to us by a glance at the subject matter of the rules regarding which they differed and the doctrines which turned to profess. To put it in a nutshell, they wanted to have an amount of latitude and freedom regarding certain of their actions which the strictness and narrowness of orthodoxy was not ready to allow, and to carry into their organization and general governance a democratic spirit which set at nought what appeared to them an unreasoning servility to the monastic authorities, which could not be supported in a reasonable management of the monasteries. The exclusive power and privileges which by lapse of time the arahats came to claim for themselves at the expense of the bhikkhus of lower order were looked upon by the Mahāsanghikas as a reappearance in a different garb of the selfish exclusiveness of the brāhmaņas, against which the rise of Buddhism was, as it were, a revolt. To vield to this meant but to yield to the same evil which the brahmanas wanted to perpetuate and the Buddhists wanted to eradicate. It was in this sort of logic that the Mahāsanghikas found a justification for their conduct and it is upon this that they found a force which could unite them into a body. The first to begin the campaign against the above tendencies of the arahats came naturally from the monks belonging to a clan which was noted throughout its existence for its democratic spirit, viz., the Vajjians. An expression of this spirit noticed at the very inception of the schism was found in the strong opposition that was made by them to the procedure by which it was decided by the orthodox arabats to make their decision at a council binding upon the opposing party. According to the procedure. only the arahats could be present in the Council and not the non-arahats. When by the application of this method of decision, the new party was outvoted, the latter rejected the decision of the majority and convened another council which was called Mahāsangīti¹ because it included both the arahats and non-arahats of the new party and from which the party itself took the name Mahāsanghika.

The seceders, according to the chronicles, revised the Dhamma and Vinaya in their own way and the doctrines which were thus supported in the revised collections were known as the Ācariyavāda<sup>2</sup> as distinguished from the Theravāda of the first council. The Dīpavamsa says that the Mahāsanghikas did not stop after changing the Vinaya rules; they went further by laying down for themselves new doctrines contrary to the established ones. When according to the usual procedure at the Mahāsangīti held by them, they recited for the settlement of the texts for their purposes the Sūtras and the Vinaya, they made alterations in the texts and their

Alteration made by the Mahāsaú-ghikas in dhamma and vinaya.

I am indebted to Dr. B. M. Barua, M. A., D. Lit., for some suggestions in this connection.

2 Dipavamsa, Ch. iv.

I Beal's Records of the Western Countries, Vol. II, p. 164, runs thus "And because in the assembly, both common folk and holy personages were mixed together, it was called the assembly of the great congregation."

arrangement and interpretations. They also replaced portions of the text by others according to their liking, and even rejected certain parts of the canon though they had been accepted according to tradition by Mahākassapa's council. They refused to include Parivara, Abhidhammappakarana, Patisambhidā, Niddesa, and the Jātakas within the Piṭaka collection1. The importance and accuracy of the decision by which the Mahāsanghikas discriminated between the original portions and the later interpolations are found in the full support that the decision obtains from modern researches bearing out their discrimination in toto. The Parivara (pātha), which is a sort of index to the Vinaya and meant as a manual for the bhikkhus has been proved by many Buddhist scholars to be a composition of a later date than that of the canon?. The Abhi. dhamma literature also has been proved to have developed after the Council of Vesāli and received its final form in Asoka's Council3. Lastly the three works, the Patisambhida, the Niddesa and the Jatakas are found to have been added to the canon without any discrimination long after its close. It would have been proper if the  $Patisambhid\bar{a}$  had been put in the Abhidhamma collection and if the Niddesa which is only a commentary on the Sutta  $Nip\bar{a}ta$  as also the  $J\bar{a}takas$  which form a commentary on the canonical  $J\bar{a}taka$  book had been excluded from the Piṭaka collection.

I Dipavamsa, Ch. v, vs. 32-38.

<sup>2</sup> Rhys Davids, Hibbert Lectures, p. 42; Oldenberg's Intro. to the Vinaya Pitaka, Vol. I, p. xxxiv.

<sup>3</sup> Oldenberg, op. cit., p. xxxiv.

Yuan Chwang relates that the Mahāsaṅghikas accepted the canon as rehearsed in Kassapa's Council but they included some discourses which Literature of the Mahāsaṅghikas. had been rejected by it as non-canonical, and that the Mahāsan-ghikas divided their canon into five parts, viz., Sūtra, Vinaya, Abhi-dharma, Miscellaneous, and Dhāraṇīs¹. It is from the Chinese travellers Fa Hien and Yuan Chwang that we learn that this school had a complete canon of its own. Fa Hien took away from Pāṭaliputra to China a complete transcript of the Mahāsanghika Vinaya in 414 A. D., and translated it into Chinese two years later². According to Yuan Chwang, the Vinaya of the

I Watters' Yuan Chwang, II, p. 160; Kern's Manual of Buddhism, p. 4.

<sup>2</sup> Takakusu, Records of the Buddhist Religion, p. xx.

I Watters' Yuan Chwang, II, p. 160—Watters finds expressly mentioned in the Chinese translation of the Questions of Sāriputta that the Vinaya settled in Mahā-kassapa's Council was called the Mahāsanghika Vinaya.

<sup>2</sup> Nanjio's Catalogue of the Chinese Tripitaka, Cols. 247 and 253 and Ms. No. 543.

Dhanakataka, the centre of the Pūrva- and Apara-śaila schools1. Similarly, the Sūtras are merely mentioned as Mahāsanghika-nikāyaagama in the Chinese work She-ta-sheng-lun, ch. 1 (No. 1183)2. We expect much light on the present point from the information which, we hope, the Chinese scholars would in the near future place at our disposal. Thus far can, however, be said regarding the sūtras that they were common to all the Buddhist schools in the form appearing in the Pali Sutta-Pitaka. The only work now available of the Mahāsanghika school is the Mahāvastu partly in prose and partly in verse. It is professedly the Vinaya of the Lokottaravāda school3, a branch of the Mahāsanghikas, and depicts the life of Buddha like the Lalitavistara and the Abhiniskramana Sūtra of the other schools.

The Mahāvastu has been edited by Prof. Senart about which he and M. Sylvain Lèvi furnish us with some information. It was properly speaking a book belonging to the Lokottaravādins of Bamian in Kashmir. The versified

I Watters, op. cit., II, p. 217.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., II, p. 161.

<sup>3</sup> Mahāvastu, ed. by Senart, p. 2.

The linguistic medium of Mahā-saughika literature.

Sanskrit while the prose portion is in Sanskrit. At present further information about the linguistic medium which might have been used by the Mahāsanghikas in their literature at the different localities where they spread is not forthcoming except this that Csoma Körösi tells us from a Tibetan source that their 'sūtra on emancipation' (i. e., the Prātimokṣa-sūtra) was in a corrupt dialect, and Wassiljew informs us from the same source that their literature existed in Prākṛt.

Up till now the manuscripts explored from Central Asia have been shown to be the remnants of the literature of the Sarvāstivādins and the later Mahāyānic schools. Nowhere do we find in the published portions of the manuscripts any mention of the Mahāsanghikas. The history of this school shows that it suffered much in its early days at the hands of the orthodox Buddhists because it was the outcome of the earliest schism in the Buddhist church. It held in high esteem and even claimed Mahākassapa, the president of the first council, as its patron-saint and founder, and believed that the new doctrines and rules of discipline were deducible from the canon settled by him1. One of the main obstacles in the way of its general popularity was its failure to secure the support of any king; for royal patronage usually counted for much in the establishment of a religion on a secure footing. Yuan Chwang records a tradition that a hundred years after the death of Buddha, a dispute regarding doctrine took place in the Buddhist church and 'King Aśoka' (most probably Kālāsoka of the Mahāvaṃsa) sided with the heretical party the Mahāsanghikas. The orthodox monks left Pāṭaliputra and went to Kash-The king afterwards changed his mind and repented of having supported the heretical party. This is, no doubt, an echo of the legend in the Mahāvamsa2 that king Kālāsoka, being misled by the seceders, the Vajjiputtakas, supported them, but afterwards, by the warning of his sister Nandatherī, changed his mind and supported the cause of the orthodox party, the Theravadins. The tradition of the Mahavamsa corroborated by Yuan Chwang shows that the

The popularity and centres of influence of the Mahā-saṅghika school.

I J. A. S. B., 1838, p. 143; Wassiljew, Der Buddhismus, pp. 294, 295; Eitel's Handbook of Chinese Buddhism, p. 88.

<sup>2</sup> Mahavamsa, Ch, IV, vs. 37-44.

Mahāsanghikas lost the support of the then reigning king of Magadha which they had at first secured. It is evident that their first centre was at Pāṭaliputra¹ where they continued to reside side by side with the Theravadins and the later religious schools. We learn from Yuan Chwang that he saw followers of different schools dwelling in the same monastery, from which it seems that the acrimony of their early hostile relations diminished a good deal at the time of Yuan Chwang's visit. I-tsing (671-695 A. D.) informs us that the Mahāsanghikas were found in his time mostly in Magadha (Central India) and a few in Lata and Sindhu (Western India) and some in a few places in Northern, Southern and Eastern India2. Before I-tsing, both Fa Hien and Yuan Chwang had come across the adherents of this school though not so frequently as those of the others. The earliest notice of this school is found in the inscription on Mathura Lion Capital (about 120 B. c.) mentioning that it had a very strong opponent in Buddhila, an

31

I Watters, op. cit., I, p. 269, 'the majority of inferior brethren at Pāṭaliputra began the Mahāsanghika School'.

<sup>2</sup> Takakusu's Records of the Buddhist Religion by I-tsing, Intro., p. xxxiii.

<sup>3</sup> Ep. Indica, vol. IX, pp. 139, 141, 146.

adherent of the Sarvāstivāda school. The school acquired some followers in Afghanistan as is evidenced by the Wardak vase discovered there. containing relics of Buddha that had been presented to the teachers of the Mahasanghika school during the reign of Huvishka by one Kamagulya of the place, whose father had probably built the vault within which the Wardak vase was deposited1. Yuan Chwang confirms this evidence by his reference to three monasteries at Andarab where he arrived after three days' journey from the country of Wardaks2 (near Ghazni). There was another centre of the school at Karle, in the Bombay Presidency, famous in the history of Buddhist architecture for its possession of the largest and finest cave-temples3 which are still standing as memorials of their past glory. That this cave was in the possession of the Mahāsanghikas is shown by two inscriptions at the cave-temples, one recording the gift of the village of Karajaka by Gautamīputra Sātakarņi to the monks of the 2 Watters' Yuan Chwang, II, pp. 267, 269.

I Ep. Indica, vol. XI, p. 211.

<sup>3</sup> See for its description Fergusson's Indian & Eastern Architecture, pp. 117ff; Fergusson and Burgess, Cave Temples of India, pp. 232ff.

Valuraka caves for the support of the school of the Mahāsanghikas1, and the other of the time of Vāsishtiputra Siripulumāyi recording the gift of a nine-celled hall to the same school by an inhabitant of Abulama2. Though the Mahāsanghikas did not receive much attention from the Buddhist writers and donors, the Karle caves show that the school commanded a great popularity in that part of the Bombay Presidency where the caves exist; for, otherwise the cavetemples could not have been so richly decorated with such fine specimens of sculptural and architectural beauty by a series of donors through centuries anxious to express their religious devotion and zeal in the best way that their resources could command. The offshoots of this school, the Lokottaravadins and the Caityavadins wielded also much influence in Buddhist society for a long time paving the way for the advent of Mahāyānism which later on came to be diffused over the whole of India.

It will appear from what has been stated previously that though germs of Mahāyānism are traceable in the doctrines of the Mahā-

Ep. Indica, vol. VII, pp. 64ff.

<sup>2 1</sup>bid., pp. 71ff,

sanghika school, it was affiliated to Hīnayānism and possessed a piṭaka similar to The doctrines of the Mahāsanghikas claimed schools. The Mahāsanghikas claimed for themselves more orthodoxy than the Theravadins and believed to have preserved more accurately the pitaka as settled by Mahākassapa in the first council. The little that we know about their doctrines from the Kathāvatthu, the Mahāvastu and the works of Bhavya, Vinītadeva and Vasumitra<sup>1</sup> points to the fact that they subscribed to the cardinal principles of Hīnayāna schools. A comparative study of the Mahāvastu of the Mahāsanghikas with the Pāli Vinaya of the Theravadins shows the great doctrinal affinity existing between the two schools. One of the objects common to both the treatises being the delineation of the early part of Buddha's missionary career, the same discourses have been recorded in each, the difference lying only in linguistic garbs. These discourses embody the essence of Buddha's teachings; and faithfully preserved, as they are, in the Vinaya of the two schools, it is apparent that the Mahā-

I Prof. Masuda's translation of Vasumitra's work from the Chinese has been mainly relied on here. (Calcutta University Journal of Letters, I, pp. 7ff.)

sanghikas and the Theravadins had no difference of view regarding what constituted the most important portion of Buddha's teachings. The discourses dwelt on the four aryan truths and their interpretations1; the eightfold path leading to emancipation2; the absence of soul as a separate entity3; the karma being the motive force in transmigration4; the theory of paticcasamuppāda5; the method of imparting spiritual teachings by gradual stages commencing from the simple dānakathā, sīlakathā etc. and ending in the higher truths6; thirty seven Bodhipakkhiya dharmas? etc. The schools however differed in in their Buddhalogical speculations, and the corollaries issuing therefrom. Prof. Takakusu has ably shown in his article on 'Docetism's the way in which the idealizing process was carried on by the Buddhists, giving rise to the belief of the Mahāsanghikas and others that Buddha was

1&2 Mahāvastu, III, pp. 331-333; Vinaya, I, pp. 10-11.

- 3 Ibid., pp. 335-337, 447; Ibid., 13-14.
- 4 Ibid., II, p. 363; III, 65, 66, 168.
- 5 Ibid., pp. 448-9; Vinaya, I, pp. 1-2.
- 6 Ibid., III, pp. 257, 408; see supra, pp. 47, 48.
- 7 See R. Kimura's Developed Doctrines etc. p. 27.
- 8 Encyclopædia of Religion and Ethics, vol. IV.

246

lokottara (superhuman) and had no worldly attributes (sāśrava dharmas), and the mortal being popularly known as Sākya Gautama was required only for lokanuvartana (conforming to worldly ways) for the benefit of this world. The corollaries based on this belief are that Buddha is omnipotent, speaks truths and nothing but truths. His rūpa-kāya (physical body), life, energy, and powers are limitless. He is always self-possessed and in samādhi (trance)1. The most important doctrine that resulted in this way lay in the theory of the Bodhisattvas. The Mahasanghikas by idealizing Buddha had to make room for a class of beings called the Bodhisattvas who by passing through various trials and by making immense self-sacrifices rose to higher stages of Bodhisattvahood. These acts are classified as the four caryas (practices)2, the ten bhūmis (stages)3 and the six pāramis4. It was these Bodhisattvas who could attain Buddhahood in course of time. The Bodhi-

Mahavastu, I, pp. 167-9; II, pp. 147, 220; Calcutta University Journal of Letters, I, pp. 7ff.

<sup>2</sup> Viz., prakrticaryā, pranidhānacaryā, anulomacaryā, and anivartanacaryā.-Mahāvastu, I, pp. 46ff.

<sup>3</sup> Mahavastu, I, pp. 77ff.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid., III, p. 226.

born without passing through the embryonic stages. They could not entertain feelings of enmity and hatred (vihimsasamjñā and vyāpādasamjñā), and were above sensual desires (kāmasamjñā). In conformity with this belief they supposed that Rāhula was self-born (aupapāduka) as Bodhisattvas could not be subject to kāma¹.

The attainments of Sākya Gautama were regarded by them as the ideal to be kept in view by every Buddhist, for according to them it was for the enlightenment of worldly beings that the lokottara Buddha adopted the human form to enable people to imitate his examples and ultimately attain Buddhahood. It was this point which brought about the schism between the Mahāsanghikas and the Theravadins. According to the latter, the summum bonum of a Buddhist should be arahathood and not Buddhahood as it is exceedingly rare that a Buddha appears in the world. It is possible for the Buddhists to become arahats in large numbers but it is exceedingly difficult for them to attain Buddhahood, Mahāsanghikas believed in the plurality of Buddhas, as will be evidenced from the first line of the Mahāvastu<sup>1</sup> and according to them the summum bonum of a Buddhist should be Buddhahood and not arahathood. In accordance with this principle as also for other reasons stated previously they did not look upon the position of an arahat as the highest stage of sanctification<sup>2</sup>.

I Mahavastu, I, p. 153.

It was the Mahāsanghikas who originated the worship of caitya and favoured that great religious merit could be acquired by even a single circumambulation of a stūpa³. Traces of stūpa worship are also found in the Pāli works but as such worship is not in consonance with the principles of the Theravädins, it seems that in later times the former borrowed it from the Mahāsanghikas.

I Mahavastu, I, p. 1; III, p. 229.

<sup>2</sup> See supra, pp. 232, 233.

<sup>3</sup> Mahavastu., II, pp. 362ff.

The Theravada School

I do not wish to reiterate the points that have already been found out after laborious researches by Pāli scholars and published in their works. I wish here to confine myself only to certain points about the language or dialect used by the Theravadins in their literature. Before proceeding to the task, I want to point out that the Theravadins were otherwise known as the Vibhaijavadins and wherever we see references to the latter, they can be applied to the former without any feeling of doubt. Dr. Oldenberg was uncertain as to the identity of the two names and the classes they denote, but after comparison of the lists of schools supplied by the Northern and Southern Buddhist sources, he found out that Vibhajjavāda was but another name of Theravāda. This conclusion finds corroboration in the Ceylonese chronicles which state the very same thing. There would have been no room for this doubt if he had noticed that in the Majjhima Nikāya, Buddha declares himself to be a vibhajjavādin and not an ekāmsavādin, indicating that his method of teaching was analytic and not synthetic. 1 Again in the same Nikāya, Buddha on hearing the doctrines of Alara Kalama and Rudraka Rāmaputra says that he possesses a better knowledge than those teachers because he knows the nanavada as well as the theravada.2 These two references go to prove that the doctrine represented by the Pāli scriptures was Thera-It was also called Vibhajjavāda owing to the particular mode of teaching the dhamma adopted by the Palists. Profs. Kern, Rhys Davids and others have endorsed the view that the whole Pali literature represents the tenets of the Theravada school. Though much has been said by scholars regarding the doctrine and and literature of the Theravadins alias Vibhajjavadins, nothing has been definitely stated as to the position of the Pali language in relation to Buddhist literature. Many a tough problem in the history of Buddhism can be solved by studying the history of Buddhist schools, viz., the original language of the Tripitaka and the time and place of origin of the Pali language. The passage occurring in the Vinaya,3 "Anujā-nāmi bhikkhave saka niruttiyā Buddhavacanam priyāpunitum" (I permit, O bhikkhus, to learn the words of Buddha in one's own dialect) carries a very great weight in regard to our present subject. It is stated by Wassiljew and Csoma Körösi¹ on the strength of Tibetan sources that the Sarvāstivādins recited their 'sutra on emancipation' (prātimokṣa sūtra) in Sanskrit, the Sāmmitīyas in Apabhramsa, the Mahāsanghikas in a corrupt dialect (a prākṛt) and the Sthavira or Theravadins in Paisacī. These four dialects are also mentioned in the Mahāvyutpatti while enumerating the subjects of a grammar.2 The Sanskrit manuscript Vimalaprabhā3 of the mediæval period contains a remark that the Pitakas were written in 96 countries in 96 lang-The manuscript gives in detail the uages.4 names of the countries, and the language current in each of them. It also records a tradition that

I Oldenberg's Intro. to the Vinaya Pilaka, I, p. xlii.32

I Majjh. Nik., II, pp. 99, 197.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., I, p. 163.

<sup>3</sup> Vinaya, CV., v. 33. 1.

2 Mahāvyutpatti, p. 64.

4 The number 96 seems to be a rough way of indicating a large number.

I Wassiljew, Buddhismus, pp. 264, 295; Csoma Körösi in J. A. S. B., Vol. VII, p. 142.

<sup>3</sup> MS. No. 4727 mentioned in the Descriptive Catalogue of Sanskrit Manuscripts in the Government Collection, A. S. B., Vol. I, p. 77.

soon after the death of Buddha, the Sangītikārakas wrote down the doctrine of the three yanas in book-form. Under the direction of Tathagata (tathaqata-niyamena), they preserved the three pitakas in the Magadha-bhāsā, the Sūtrāntas in Sindhubhāṣā, the Pāramitās in Sanskrit, the Mantras and Tantras in Sanskrit, Prakrt, Apabhramsa and uncultured Sabarādi mlecchabhāsā and so forth. The manuscript further mentions that the Buddhists did not pay much attention to Sanskrit regarding metres and grammatical rules, indicating thereby that it had in view the mixed dialect (gāthā as it is usually termed) used in some of the Buddhist Sanskrit books like the Lalitavistara, Mahāvastu, etc. The above statements of Indian writers of old have an evidentiary value as will be seen presently. Scholars like Stein, Grunwedel, Le Coq, Leumann, Hoernle, Sylvain Lévi by their unflinching zeal in the search of manuscripts in Central Asia have brought to light many things confirming the assertions of the mediæval writers. These scholars have saved from eternal oblivion remnants of manuscripts in so many languages as Sanskrit, Prākṛt, Kuchean, Khotanese, Proto-Tibetan and Eastern Iranian. Some of the fragments of Sanskrit and Prākṛt manuscripts as also a few discovered in Nepal have their counterparts in the Pali pitakas.1 Among them are found almost complete portions of the piţakas, e.g., the Sanskrit versions of the Udānavarga and the Prātimokṣa Sūtra, and the Prākrta version of the Dharmapada. Prof. Kern in his introduction to the translation of the Saddharma Pundarīka<sup>2</sup> has shown that the various versions of a passage in Sanskrit, Pāli and Prakrt reveal that they are not based upon one another but upon a common original, which is now lost. Dr. Hoernle in editing the fragments of the manuscript Saddharma Pundarīka remarks that the Sanskrit text found in Nepal bears many similarities to the former but with some variations, from which it may safely be concluded that "the text of the Saddharma Pundarīka, to which both the Central Asian and the Nepalese manuscripts go back, was written in a language that had far more Prākṛtisms than either of the two versions."3 Hence we see that the two versions are based upon an original work in Prākṛt. He has also shown by comparing the fragments of Sanskrit manuscripts with passages in the Pāli Sūtra and Vinaya Pitaka that there was a complete Sanskrit canon which was independent of the Pāli canon but with a commonness from which it could be safely inferred that both the Sanskrit and the Pāli canon were based upon a common original. This original very probably dates back to the lifetime of Buddha and was the one which was recited in the first council. The manuscript Vimalaprabhā says that just after the demise of the Tathāgata, the Sangītikārakas put down the Tripitaka in the Magadhabhāṣā. That this tradition had a kernel of truth in it appears from these facts:—

I E.g., Ātanātiya Sūtra; Sangāti Sūtra; Pravāraņā Sūtra; Candropama Sūtra; Śakti Sūtra; Śuka Sūtra; etc. Hoernle's Manuscript Remains of Buddhist Literature in Eastern Turkestan, pp. 18, 36, 41, 46.

<sup>2</sup> S. B. E., vol. xxi, pp. xi-xv.

<sup>3</sup> Hoernle's Manuscript Remains of Buddhist Literature in Eastern Turkestan, p. 161.

All the versions of the Piṭaka were based upon one common original in Magadha-bhāṣā.

(1) Buddha preferred preaching in the spoken dialect of the masses in order that his doctrines might be readily intelligible to them; (2) he was born and bred up in a place, the current dialect of which, if not the same as that prevailing among the masses of Magadha among whom he preached, must at least have been influenced by the latter in view of the widespread influence that is, as a rule, exercised by the principal dialect of the metropolis; (3) it is not likely that

Buddha who used a dialect at Kapilavastu up to about his 29th year should have found the dialect of Magadha unintelligible to him; on the other hand he used the dialect of Magadha easily and fluently, from which it is allowable to infer that the dialect of Kapilavastu was not at least separated from the dialect of Magadha by a gulf which required previous education or preparation to bridge up; and (4) his early missionary tours were generally within the limits of the country of Magadha. In the present state of our knowledge it is not possible to state anything more definite than what has been said above about the dialect in which Buddha preached. Buddha's preachings that were learnt by heart at the time and handed down to posterity no doubt existed in the very dialect used by him which has been termed the Magadhabhāṣā. It is very likely that this dialect has been dragging out its thin thread of existence under the layers of various other dialects or languages that have accumulated in the Pāli Pitaka in its present form; and many of the various antiquated words and expressions that meet our eyes in the said Pali text and which differ from the genuine Pāli words and expressions in several respects can with probability be credited to the Magadhabhāṣā.

Dr. Oldenberg agrees with us in holding that the Pāli version of the Tripiṭaka was not the original version but a redaction of same. He then takes up the question as "to what part of India did the Pāli originally belong, and from whence did it spread to Ceylon." The solution he arrives at is that Pāli was the original language of Kalinga, i.e., of countries south of the Vindhya mountains. This solution is based on the resemblance of the Khandagiri inscription to the Pāli language. It is asserted by Dr. Oldenberg that the Pāli Tripiṭaka was taken to Ceylon from Southern India probably from Kalinga or Andhra with which countries Ceylon stood in close connection; and he attaches little importance to the Ceylonese tradition that Mahinda took the Pāli canon to Ceylon. These inferences of Dr. Oldenberg are open to doubt for reasons which are given below:—

Time and place of origin of the Pāli language of the Theravādins.

(1) Franke by an exhaustive and comparative study of the inscriptional Prākṛts and Pāli has come to the conclusion that the home of literary Pāli was at Ujjayinī surrounded by

I Oldenberg's Intro. to the Vinava Pitaka, I, p. liv.

localities where the inscriptional dialects

Franke's result of comparative study of inscriptions.

Csoma

Körösi's statement as to the Paisāci dialect

seen in the light of conclusion of

Grierson and others as to the development of Pali from Paisa-

CI.

more akin to Pali than the dialects of the inscriptions found in the East, South, and South-west.1

(2) There were two centres of the earliest form of Buddhism, one at the well-known metropolis Pāţaliputra and the other at Ujjayini. The establishment of the second centre of Buddhism was mainly due to Mahākaccāyana, one of the great disciples of Buddha. He was a native of Ujjayinī, being a son of the priest of king Canda Pajjota of the place. After completing his brahmanic education, he succeeded to his father's office. It is said that he was sent by king Pajjota to fetch Buddha, but was on his arrival there ordained, after which he returned as a bhikkhu to his native land Avanti.2 Buddha could not come with Mahākaccāyana but he said that Mahākaccāyana

Otto Franke's Pāli und Sanskrit, pp. 131, 132, summarised by Grierson in his paper 'Home of Literary Pāli' in the Bhandarkar Commemoration Volume, p. 117.

Majih. Nik., III, pp. 267ff.; Sam. Nik., IV, p. 60; Divyāvadāna, pp. 37-39; Mahāvastu, III, p. 382.

33

would be able to satisfy the king with his exposition of the law. Another noted disciple of this part of the country was Punna Mantaniputta who was a trader and an inhabitant of Sunāparānta. On one occasion he went with a caravan to Sāvatthi where he heard a discourse from Buddha, resolved to become a Buddhist monk and became a disciple of Mahākaccāyana. From the conversation that Punna Mantaniputta had with Buddha, it appears that people of Sunāparānta were rough and rustic in their manners and Buddha was afraid lest he (Punna) should receive rough treatment at their hands. However, it is said that Punna won many people to his side. Mahākaccāyana once sent information to Buddha through a disciple of his, Sona Kuţikanna, that the number of bhikkhus at Avantidakkhināpatha was not very large. The activities of these two chief disciples of Buddha for the propagation of Buddhism in Western India met with some success even as early as the 5th century B.C. 2 The Chinese travellers, who saw followers of the Theravada school at several places in eastern India and Ceylon, found them also at Surat and Bharukaccha, 1 Lāta and Sindhu.2 Csoma Körösi and Wassiljew furnish us with the information that the Theravādins preserved their literature in the Paisācī dialect.3 Prof. Konow places the home of Paisācī at Ujjayini or more properly, about the Vindhya mountains.4 He also points out that Pāli closely agrees with Paisaci. Sir G. Grierson holds the view as well that Pali is a literary form of Paisacī<sup>5</sup> but does not agree with Prof. Konow regarding the home of the dialect; he is of opinion that its place of origin was in the North-west at and near Taksasila, and states that the dialect very probably passed from the North-west to Rajputana up to the Konkan coast. The tradition preserved by

I Vinaya, MV., v, 13, 2.

<sup>2</sup> Upāli's name is associated with this school in the tradition given by Csoma Körösi.

- I Watters' Yuan Chwang, II, pp. 241, 248. Yuan Chwang refers to the Theravāda School as the Mahā-yānist Sthavira School; for a discussion on the subject see Watters, op. cit., II, p. 235.
- 2 Takakusu's Records of the Buddhist Religion, p. 7.
  - 3 Wassiljew, Der Buddhismus etc., pp. 294, 295.
- 4 Z. D. M. G., lxvi, (1910), pp. 114ff, summarised by Sir G. Grierson in the Bhandarkar Commemoration Volume, pp. 119, 120. See also J. R. A. S., 1921, pp. 244-45, 424-28.
  - 5 Indian Antiquary, 1915, p. 227 fn.

260

Somadeva, Dandin and Subandhu that the Brhat-kathā was written in Paisācī by Guṇā-dhya, an inhabitant of the region about Ujja-yinī, favours the view that Paisācī was for sometime the spoken dialect of Ujjayinī. But the strongest ground for the view is philological which has been exhaustively dealt with by Prof. Konow and need not be repeated here. The close resemblance that subsists between Paisācī and Pāli may be seen by a glance at the two passages, mentioned below, one in Paisācī and the other its Pāli rendering.

(3) The great importance attached by the Pāli writers and Chinese travellers to Mahinda for the propagation of Buddhism in Ceylon should not be dismissed as baseless. The integrity of the chapter of the Mahāvaṃsa detailing Asoka's missionary activities and supplying us

I Somadeva's Kathāsarita-sāgara, Intro.

2 Dandin's Kāvyādarša, p. 35. See also Bühler's article in the Indian Antiquary, vol. I.

3 Paisācī (Kumārpāla-carita):-

Paññāna rachiyā guna-nithinā raññā anañña-puññena Cintetabbam matanādi verino kiha vijetabba.

Its Pāli rendering:-

Pahnānam rājinā guna-nidhinā rannā anahna-pun-

Cintetabba madanādi verino kehi vijetabba.

Mahinda's connection with the place of origin of Paisaci and his journey to Ceylon therefrom, embarking from western port.

with names of missionaries has been corroborated by the discovery of a casket on which are inscribed names of two missionaries sent to the Himavanta which are identical with those given by the Mahāvaṃsa. In these circumstances, it would be unreasonable to doubt the statement regarding Mahinda's mission to Cevlon unless they are negatived by other stronger evidences. Dr. Olden-berg disbelieves that Mahinda received his Buddhistic education at Ujjayinī. He bases his opinion on the Mahāvamsa which states that Mahinda studied the Tripitaka at Pātaliputra<sup>1</sup> when Mahinda was twenty years old. But there is nothing in the Mahāvamsa to indicate that Mahinda accompanied his father on his way to Pāṭaliputra for assumption of royal power. the contrary we learn that Mahinda's mother continued to live at Vidisa, 2 owing to her subsidiary position among Asoka's wives. Asoka had two other wives referred to in the Buddhist-Sanskrit works as living with him at Pāṭaliputra. It was usual with the Hindu kings and chiefs to be polygamous, but it was the principal wife alone who enjoyed a status in the eye of the laws relating to inheritance.1 Children born of wives other than the principal either lived on appanages or retired from the household life.2 It was due to this custom, I believe, that Mahinda joined the Buddhist order and continued living with his mother at Avanti instead of coming to Pataliputra with Asoka. It was not until his twentieth year that he was called by Asoka to the metropolis where he was asked to be ordained and to devote himself to the study of the Tripitaka. It is this fact which has been mentioned in the passage of the Mahāvaṃsa which has been utilized by Dr. Oldenberg as pointed out already. There is nothing in this passage to show that the Tripitaka studied by him was in the Pali language. The passage of the Mahāvamsa is silent on this point and Dr. Oldenberg supplied it on the strength of the resemblance that the language of the Khandagiri inscription bears to the Pāli language. If he did so, it was not as the result of the development of the Pāli piṭaka from the spoken dialect of Kalinga as Dr. Oldenberg supposes, nor as the result of Mahinda being educated at Pāṭaliputra, for Mahinda had his early education at Ujjayinī. The Pāli piṭaka was more easily intelligible to Mahinda than any other for the reason that he was educated in a place where Paisāci was the current dialect and Pāli was the literary one and used in the pitaka which in course of time supplanted the Paisācī piṭaka. The carrying of the Pāli piṭaka to Ceylon for the first time by Mahinda has been disbelieved by Dr. Oldenberg. But there are reasons for doubting Dr. Oldenberg's conclusion. Mahinda when he was charged by Asoka with the duty of propagating Buddhism in Ceylon came to Avanti where he stayed immediately before his journey to Ceylon. Dr. Oldenberg states that Pāli piṭaka was taken to Ceylon by a certain person from a port in Kalinga. But as I have already shown, there is no reason to doubt the tradition of Mahinda's sailing to Ceylon for the purpose and as it is a historical fact that he stayed at Ujjayinī before sailing out, it would be natural that he would choose to start from a port on the western coast which was near Ujjayinī than from one on the far off eastern coast overcoming the difficulties of communication that existed in those days in going to a distant place. It may be said in a general way that in ancient times Ceylon had closer connection with western India than the eastern in almost all matters. Now as to the question of choice of the pitaka which Mahinda took to Ceylon: From what has been said above as to the early education of Mahinda, his connection with Ujjayinī as his birthplace, and his stay there up to his twentieth year during which time he became familiarised with Paiśācī as the spoken dialect, it is, I think, reasonable to infer that his choice would fall upon the Pāli pitaka, Pāli being the literary form of Paiśācī, the piṭaka in that language gradually supplanting its progenitor the Paiśācī version.

Oldenberg's Intro. to the Vinaya Pitaka, p. li.

Mahāvamsa, Ch. xiii. 2

V. A. Smith's Early History of India, p. 191.

SCHOOLS OF BUDDHISM

264

To sum up: In view of the combined arguments advanced by Sir G. Grierson, Profs. Sten Konow and Franke that Pāli is the literary form of Paiśācī which obtained currency in the region about Ujjayiṇī, and, in view of the statement made by Csoma Körösi and Wassiljew on the authority of Tibetan sources that there was a Paiśācī version of the piṭaka, it is only natural to infer that the piṭaka using Pāli as its medium was based upon the one in Paiśācī. It has also been shown from Csoma Körösi and Wassiljew's statements that the Theravādins had their literature in Paiśācī,—a fact which is significant for my purpose, because of the vital connection of the Theravadins with Avanti, and their exodus to Ceylon from there. The early education of Mahinda makes it apparent to us that he must have been more inclined to the literary dialect of his birthplace than to any other and it was only natural that he should take the Pali version with him to Ceylon because it was the version of his country that was growing into popularity and throwing the Paiśacī version into the shade.

265

THE THERAVADA SCHOOL

The Sarvastivada School

Buddhism has at present two principal divisions, namely, Hīnayāna and Mahāyāna, the former being subdivided into Vaibhasika and Sautrāntika, and the latter into Mādhyamika and Yogācāra1. Each of these four schools has its origin in the teachings of one great teacher, promulgated over 2,000 years ago, and has developted in its own way through several centuries. The present section aims to unfold the history of one of them, the Vaibhāsika, formerly known as the Sarvāstivāda school, the appellation of Vaibhāṣika having been given to the school by Hindu philosophers in view of the fact that its doctrines were based upon the Vibhāṣā-śāstras compiled at the council of Kaniska2.

Almost all the treatises dealing with the schools exclusively or inter alia record their number as eighteen as traditionally fixed, affili-

r. For the tenets of the four schools, see Mahā-mahopādhyāya Dr. Satis Candra Vidyābhūaṣṇa's Mediæval Logic (1st ed.), pp. 66 ff.

<sup>2</sup> Dr S. C. Vidyabhūsana, op, cit., p. 66.

ating them to one or other of the two primitive schools, Sthaviravāda and Mahāsanghika, Deviations from this sort of classification are found in the Tibetan work Bhiksu-varhhagraprtstha1 and the Records of I-tsing2. They affiliate the eighteen schools to the four original ones, viz. (1) Ārya-sarvāstivādin, (2) Mahāsanghika, (3) Ārya-sāmmitīya, and (4) Ārya-sthavira. The duration of existence of these four as independent schools was comparatively longer, and the number of adherents larger3. Other schools were shortlived, or coalesced into one another in spite of their points of difference. The most primitive school was the Sthavira-vada, the doctrines of which have been fully preserved in the extant Pali literature. The school that can claim priority in age and preservation of pristine originality next to the Sthavira-vada is the Sarvastivada. Its literature is vast but to our misfortune the whole of it is yet in manuscripts4, some of which are in Buddhist-Sanskrit and

I Rockhill, Life of the Buddha, p. 180, fn.

<sup>2</sup> Takakusu's I-tsing, pp. 7-8.

<sup>3</sup> J. R. A. S., 1891.

<sup>4</sup> A few of these Mss. in Buddhist Sanskrit are deposited in the Library of the Asiatic Society of Bengal,

the rest in Chinese and Tibetan. The two schools mentioned above were associated with the names of two great emperors, Asoka and Kanişka, through whose effort and patronage, they gained ground and produced a rich and extensive literature. The principal seat of the Theravadins was Magadha while that of the other was Kashmir in conformity with the location of the courts of the respective sovereigns from whom each drew its support.

An account of the Council of Kaniska<sup>1</sup> is furnished by the Chinese traveller Yuan Chwang.

Council of years after the death of Buddha at the instance of Kaniska. The king evinced interest to learn the truths of Buddhism but he was perplexed by the variant interpretations given of Buddha's teachings by the monks? In concert with the head of the

I Watters, Yuan Chwang, I, pp. 270 ft In later Tibetan works the Council is referred to and some particulars are also given but they do not gree in details with Yuan Chwang's account. See Ibid., p. 278 (citing Tārānāth, 58 and Vasubandhu-chuan No. 1463); Wassilief, Der Buddhismus, pp. 183 ff.

2 The modern N. W. Frontier Province and Gandhāra were inhabited by many sects of Hindus and Buddhist church Pārśva, the king, convened a council with a view to record the different interpretations, and selected Kashmir as the place of meeting. Five hundred arahats were called out for membership, the Sarvāstivādins forming the majority. The President of the meeting was Vasumitra who was also a Sarvāstivadin, believing in the realism of material existence in the past, present, and future1, and composed the two Abhidharma pādas (supplements) of the school2. Pursuant to the resolution of the council were compiled the Vibhāṣās (commentaries or discussions) being the opinions of the different schools on the Sūtra, Vinaya, and Abhidharma, known respectively as the Upadeśa Sūtra, Vinaya-Vibhāṣā Śāstra, and Abhidharma-Vibhāṣā Śāstra. But as the decisions of the disputed points rested on the President<sup>3</sup>, the accepted version should naturally be in most cases that of the Buddhists. Kashmir was the stronghold oi the Mahāsanghika and Sarvāstivāda Schools. See Watters, Yuan Chwang, I, pp. 202, 283.

I Cf. Mrs. Rhys Davids, Points of the Controversy,

p. xix.

2 Abhidharma Prakarana Pāda and Abhidharma Dhātukāya Pāda; see infra, pp. 288ff.

3 Watters, Yuan Chwang, I, p. 271.

270

Sarvāstivādins<sup>1</sup>. It is for this reason that the Vibhāṣās denoted the literature of the Sarvāstivādins and specially the Abhidharma commentaries, and the appellation Vaibhāṣika was given them by later writers<sup>2</sup>.

It was only after this council that the Sarvāstivāda school rose to its highest importance.

Duration of existence of the Sarvāstivāda or the Vaibhāṣika school.

But the seed sown during the reign of the great Buddhist emperor Asoka when the activities of the school were confined within Magadha and Kosala now grew into an extensive foliage sending forth its branches beyond these limits under the fostering care of Kaniska. With the spread of Buddhism into Kashmir by the first Buddhist missionary Majjhantika sent by Asoka under the advice of Moggaliputta Tissa, the Sarvāstivādins thought

I V. A. Smith, Early History of India, pp. 267, 268. Mr. Smith is of opinion that the Council was of the Sarvāstivādins and the literature written at that time, viz., the Mahā-vibhāṣā, belonged to this school.

2 Prof. Takakusu in his article on the Sarvāstivādins (E.R.E., xi, p. 198) says that the Vibhāṣā is the name of the commentary compiled some time after Kaniṣka's reign to explain the Jāānaprasthāna Sūtra of Kātyāyanīputra.

it advisable to depute their representatives to Kashmir in view of its growing importance as a proselytizing centre. Yuan Chwang<sup>1</sup> also tells us that Asoka not only sent Buddhist monks but also built monasteries at that place. Now as the school of Buddhism planted here came from Pāṭaliputra and through the members of Moggaliputta's church, it would naturally follow that the first church founded in these places was that of the Theravadins. With the growing importance of the place as a centre of Buddhism, other schools also made their way to Kashmir, and it is not unlikely that the Sarvāstivadins owing to their closer connection with the Theravadins would follow next. But it should be remembered that the Sarvāstivāda school of Kaniska's time brought in further changes in the doctrine for which it has been distinguished from the older school, which was Ārya-sarvāstivādin2. However, the named the original Sarvāstivāda school had its birth before Asoka's council (3rd century B. C.), for, the Kathāvatthu¹ which obtained its final shape in this council took notice of same for refuting its tenets. The school does not seem to have gained much importance at this time or a century later, as the Sanchi or Bharhut inscriptions² did not mention it or any other schools which abounded in the later inscriptions. About the beginning of the Christian era, it came to be recognized as one of the principal schools not only in Kashmir and Gandhāra but also in Central India. The adherents of this school began to be the recipients of donations in the shape of monasteries, images, etc., from monks, laymen, kings, and queens³.

I Watters, Yuan Chwang, I, p. 269-

<sup>2</sup> Rockhill, Life of the Buddha, pp. 183 ff. quoting Bhikkhu Varhhagrap: tstha which puts Mūla-sarvāstivādin as one of the four schools seceding from the Ārya-sarvāstivādin.

Fa-hien (319—414 A. D.) noticed the existence of this school in Pāṭaliputra and China while Yuan Chwang (629—645 A. D.) found it "chiefly in Kashgar, Udyana, and several other places in the Northern Frontier, in Matipura, Kanauj, and a place near Rājagṛha in

I Mrs. Rhys Davids, Points of the Controversy, p. xix.

<sup>2</sup> J.R.A.S., 1892, p. 597. (Bühler's letter).

<sup>3</sup> Epigraphia Indica, Vol. ii, p. 212 (Kamari Inscription); Vol. viii, p. 111 (also Vol. ix, p. 29) (Set Mahet Image Inscription of the time of Kaniska or Huviska); Vol. ix, pp. 135 ff. (The Inscriptions on the Mathura Lion-capital).

Northern India and also in Persia in the West." Since this time the geographical expansion of the school continued further until in I-tsing's time the adherents of the school were also found in Lāṭa, Sindhu, Southern and Eastern India, Sumatra, Java, China, Central Asia, and Cochin China. 1 Sankarācārya (eighth century A. D.), set himself to refuting the doctrines of the Sarvāstitvavāda from the standpoint of a Vedāntin2, while Mādhaväcārya in the fourteenth century tried to give an exposition of the doctrines of the Vaibhāṣikas3, by which title the Sarvāstivādins were afterwards known. Thus we see that the school, originating in the third century B. C., attained its highest development in the reign of Kaniska and lasted up to the fourteenth century; and counted as one of the four premier schools of Buddhism, it stood on the same level with one of them, namely, that of the xlviii, pt iii), pp. 500-516.

2 Vedanta Sutras (translated in S.B.E., Vol.

3 Sarva-darsana-samgraha (translated by Cowell and Gough), Ch. II. See also Sad-darsana-samuccaya, and Advaita-brahma-siddhi, pp. 67 ff.

I Prof. Takakusu, J.P.T.S., 1904-5, p. 71 citing Legge's Fa-hien, p. 99; J.R.A.S., 1891, p. 420; and I-tsing's Records, pp. xxii-xxiv.

Theravadins, who, by being compelled by force of circumstances to take shelter in Ceylon, have survived up till now<sup>1</sup>.

Wassiljew<sup>2</sup> on the authority of the Tibetan sources makes the statement that the literature of this school was in Sanskrit. The later works of this school, composed or compiled after the council of Kanişka, were no doubt in Sanskrit<sup>3</sup>, e.g. the Prātimokṣa-sūtra, Udāna-varga, prose portion of the Lalitavistara, Divyā- been written in a Prākṛt dialect. This can be inferred from the following considerations. The council of Kaniṣka was held in Kashmir, the literary dialect of which at this time was Sanskrit. Though the Vibhāṣās compiled at this council have not come down to us, yet the fact that they were composed at the place inhabited

Language used in the works of this school.

I Cf. E.R.E., xi, p. 198—"The existence of the Sarvāstivādins can be traced during more than fifteen centuries of Indian history".

2 Wassiljew, Der Buddhismus, p. 294. I am indebted to Dr. B. M. Barua, M. A., D. Litt. for this information and a few other suggestions here.

3 See Hoernle's Manuscript Remains of Buddhist Literature etc., pp. 166ff. by people among whom Sanskrit was prevalent as the literary language, and to whom, in a large measure, the Vibhāṣās were intended to appeal, is a strong reason for supposing that they were most probably compiled in that language. To this should be added the consideration that all the seven titles of the seven works on Abhidharma of the Sarvāstivādins in their Chinese version have been restored by Prof. Takakusu to Sanskrit originals. The names of those works appearing in the list furnished by Mahāvyutpatti¹ and Abhidharma-koṣa-vyākhyā² are also Sanskrit showing a great probability of the compilations of the works of this school in Sanskrit.

The discovery of manuscripts in connection with the excavations in Central Asia under the supervision of Dr. Stein lends support to the view and rouses the hope that more light would be forthcoming upon these obscure points. The finds that are already to hand prove that there was a complete Buddhist-Sanskrit canon belonging to the Sarvastivadins. The order in which, roughly speaking, Sanskrit and Prakrt alternated as a literary medium in North-western India, seems to my mind to be that in pre-Buddhist period Sanskrit was generally used as the medium, but with the movement initiated by Buddha and afterwards taken up by Asoka for spreading Buddhism, involving the necessity of appealing to the religious sentiments of the masses through a medium easily intelligible to them, the existing literary works began to be rendered into the Prākṛt versions and new Prākṛt works began to be composed. The prevalence of Prakrt as the literary medium lasted for a long time and this was followed by a period when Sanskrit re-asserted itself as the medium for literary uses. factors which contributed to these changes are many, of which only one or two are patent to us and the rest are either obscure or stand even beyond the range of guesses. The only inferences that we can draw in these circumstances are from the fragments of facts that are coming up into view at times, giving rise in our minds to hypotheses which fit in best with the bases of our present knowledge of Buddhistic history of the times; these provisional inferences, however, will have to be modified in the light of facts that future may reveal.

I Published in the Bibliotheca Buddhica; see art. Agama.

<sup>2</sup> Kārikā III, cited by Prof. Takakusu in the J. P. T. S., 1904-5, p. 75, fn.; see also p. 76, fn., for the titles as restored from the Tibetan sources.

276

THE SARVASTIVADA SCHOOL

The translation of six hundred and fifty-seven Buddhist canonical works from Sanskrit into

Chinese is attributed to Yuan

Literature of the school:
(I) Sūtras.

Chinese is attributed to Yuan

Chwang. Sixty-seven of these works make up the Sūtras, Vinayas, and Sāstras¹ of the Sarvāstivādins. In Nanjio's Catalogue<sup>2</sup> under the heading Hīna-yāna Sūtras, the four āgamas, viz., Dīrghāgama, Madhyamāgama, Ekottarāgama, and Saṃyuktā-gama<sup>3</sup> corresponding to the four Pāli Nikāyas, have been mentioned and the contents of the first three āgamas have also been given. By comparing the contents with those of the Pāli recensions of those works it becomes evident that the Chinese translations were made from an original which is not identical with the texts as represented in the Pāli recensions. The differences are not merely in the texts but also in the number and arrangement of the sūtras. In spite of the differences, however, the names and the subjects of the sūtras are identical with those of the Pali works. The other Chinese works placed under the aforesaid heading (Hīnayāna Sutras) seem to be separate translations of the important sūtras comprised in the four āgamas. In the Mahāvyutpatti1, the four āgamas bear the identical titles and to them a fifth agama is added, namely, the Kṣudrakāgama. Chinese translators do not expressly mention the school to which these agamas or sutras belong, as they have done in the case of the Vinaya and the Abhidharma except in the case of the translation of the Buddhacarita and Abhiniskramana Sūtra2, in which the translator remarks that five different schools named the Life of Buddha in different ways as follows :-

<sup>1</sup> Watters, Yuan Chwang, I, pp. 20, 21; Sastras here refer to the Abhidharma-pitaka.

<sup>2</sup> Buniyu Nanjio's Catalogue of the Chinese translations of the Buddhist Tripitaka.

<sup>3</sup> Divyāvadāna (p. 333) knows of four āgamas, viz., Dīrgha, Madhyama, Samyukta, and Ekottarika.

(1) Mahāvastu of the Mahāsanghikas,

(2) Mahāvyūha or Lalitavistara of the Sarvāstivādins,

(3) Buddha's former Nidāna or Avadāna of the Kāśyapīyas,

(4) Buddhacarita of the Dharmaguptas, and

(5) Vinaya-piṭaka-mūla of the Mahiśāsakas.

The Chinese translators used, as a rule, to mention the name of the school to which the works translated by them belonged. Want of this indication in the case of the agamas leads us to infer that the various schools were at one in their acceptance of the texts of the āgamas. It is natural that it should be so in view of the sanctity and reverence attached to Buddha's sayings which none of the schools dared to alter without committing sacrilege and, therefore, the differences were confined to the doctrines only, originating in the divergent interpretations of the same texts as also in the variations in the stress laid on particular aspects of their meaning. The collection of these sayings varied in number in the different schools, and this accounts for the varying number of sūtras on the same subjects in the compilations of the different Though the Udanavarqa1 and the schools. Dharmapada 2 are in verse, their Theravada and Sarvāstivāda recensions agree in the substance of the sayings versified in them, though they disagree as to the length and arrangement of their respective treatments of those sayings. The Kathavatthu collecting the doctrines of different Buddhist schools makes it clear that though the doctrines differ, they all refer to the same pitakas as their authority, which also goes to support the inference. Further, in the Kathāvatthu, the authorities cited in support of the doctrines of each school have been traced in the Pāli pitakas, proving thereby that there was no variation in the substance of the sayings though there might have been in the recensions. The Prātimokṣa Sūtra of the Sarvāstivādins and the fragments of the Nikāyas and the Vinaya found in Eastern Turkestan also corroborate the above inference<sup>1</sup>.

I Mahavyutpatti, Art. Agama.

<sup>2</sup> Nanjio's Catalogue, col. 163.

<sup>1</sup> Rockhill's translation (Trübner series).

<sup>2</sup> In the Kharosthī recension (ed. by Dr. Barua and Mr. Mitra).

The Vinaya unlike the Sūtrapiṭaka experienced a very different treatment in the hands of the bhikkhus. We learn from the Chinese translations that there were four Vinayas belonging to four different schools, viz., Sarvāstivāda, Mahiśāsaka, Dharmagupta, and Mahāsaṅghika?.

There were constant disputations among the bhikkhus on account of disagreement regarding minor rules of discipline,

<sup>1</sup> Hoernle, Manuscript Remains, etc., pp. 166, 168,

Nanjio's Catalogue, col. 246ff. Besides the complete Vinaya of the above mentioned schools, there were supplementary treatises dealing with portions of the Vinaya text.

e. g., cutting and wearing of robes, inclusion of meat and milk in the articles of food, residence in monasteries within towns and cities, worship of caityas and images, etc1. To heighten the importance of the rules, each school invented episodes in the life of Buddha to serve as the basis of these rules. This accounts for a good many differences among the rules of several schools, but, there were also other causes such as divergences in the circumstances and surroundings that were responsible for the like differences. Though there were alterations in the supplementary portions of the Vinaya as adopted by the schools, viz., in the Mahāvagga and Cullavagga, the original Pātimokkha seems to have remained the same in all of them. It is evident from the Prātimoksas of the Sarvāstivāda, the Dharmagupta, and the Theravada schools that the differences between them are negligible2. Dr. Oldenberg has advanced his arguments to prove the Pātimokkha to be the

I See supra, pp. 221, 222, regarding Devadatta's school, and quarrel among the Kosambi bhikkhus; Watters, Yuan Chwang, I, p. 150; Takakusu, I-tsing.

<sup>2</sup> J.R.A.S., Vol. xix, O.S., pp. 407-408; Prātimokṣa Sūtra of the Sarvāstivādins (ed. by L. Finot in

oldest part of of the Vinaya. The frequent mention of the Pātimokkha in the Nikāyas shows beyond doubt that this formed one of the earliest compositions of the Buddhists. Dr. Oldenberg, after a comparison of the Vinayas of the three schools, Mahišāsakas, Theravādins, and Sarvāstivādins, arrived at the conclusion that all the Vinayas were fundamentally the same though later additions were made to some of them.

The Tibetan version of the Vinaya, an analysis of which is furnished by Csoma Körösi², was based according to Wassiljew on the Sarvāstivāda recension of the Vinaya³. This inference finds support in the fact pointed out by Csoma Körösi that a picture representing Buddha in the middle with Sāriputta and Rāhula on his two sides appears on the first leaf of the Tibetan manuscript. The significance of this picture from our point of view lies in this that Sāriputta and Rāhula were the special objects of worship the Journal Asiatique, 1913. See also Hoernle, op. cit., pp. 356-376.

I Vinaya Pitaka (ed. by Oldenberg), Intro., p. xxxvii.

<sup>2</sup> Asiatic Researches, Vol. xx.

<sup>3</sup> Wassiljew, Der Buddhismus, p. 96.

of the Sarvāstivādins. Rāhula, a disciple of Sāriputta has been mentioned by Chinese authorities as the founder of the Sarvāstivāda school. It also appears from a passage in the manuscript that the Tibetan rendering was made by an inhabitant of Kashmir who was a follower of the Vaibhāṣika school which is nothing but a variant appellation of the Sarvāstivāda.

Thus, we see that the Sarvāstivādins had a complete Vinaya in all its divisions, viz.,

- (1) Vinaya-vastu<sup>2</sup>, (2) Prātimokṣa sūtra<sup>3</sup>,
- (3) Vinaya-vibhāga<sup>4</sup>, (4) Vinaya-kṣudraka-vastu<sup>5</sup>, and (5) Vinaya-uttara-grantha<sup>6</sup>. Prof. Csoma Körösi's analysis of the Tibetan Vinaya furnishes details of the first part of the book only, i. e., the Vinaya-vastu.

By way of illustration of the degree of similarity and dissimilarity existing between the Tibetan and Pāli versions of the Vinaya, I give

- I Eitel, Handbook of Chinese Buddhism, sv. Rāhula. Cf. Hoernle, op. cit., p. 166.
- 2 Corresponding with the Mahāvagga of the Pāli Vinava-pitaka.
- 3 & 4 Corresponding with the Sutta-vibhanga of the Pāli Vinaya-piṭaka (including Pātimokkha).
  - 5 Corresponding with the Cullavagga.
  - 6 Corresponding with the Parivara.

here a rough sketch of the inferences that may be drawn from a comparison of the two versions of the first part of the Vinaya, viz., the Vinayavatu. I should mention at the outset that throughout the Vinaya, we see as a rule that particular events are taken up by Buddha as the subjects of anecdotes pointing to a moral, which has been reduced by him into rules for the guidance of his disciples; and thus the Vinayava naturally divides itself into two portions, one giving the anecdotes and the other the rules, though, of course, the former are in every case followed by those of the latter to which they appertained.

In the two versions of the Vinaya there is very little disagreement as to the rules but it is found that the same rule has been elicited from different anecdotes. As for example, in the Pāli version, the rule that a person cannot be ordained unless he has obtained the permission of his parents has been educed from the ordination of Rāhula, who had not taken his mother's consent. In the Sarvāstivāda version appears the same rule but the occasion is differently stated, viz., a young man leaves his home secretly and joins the order without the know-ledge of his parents<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Vinaya, I, p. 83.

It may also be mentioned as a distinctive feature of the Sarvāstivāda version of the Vinaya that it is more diffuse at places than the Pāli version. Another distinction lies in the fact that certain points occurring in the former are altogether absent in the latter. In leaf 195 of the second volume of the Vinaya-vastu, reference has been made to the abstract meditation carried to excess by the priests of the Sakya clan, and explanations given of the terms relating thereto. In leaf 20 of the same volume, five sorts of ghantis, (plates of metals) are mentioned as required at the time of prayer and the recitation of the Prātimoksa. The fourth volume of this book contains 470 leaves in which a complete life of Buddha has been given embodying accounts beginning with the origin of the Sakya race and ending with Devadatta's (Lhas-byin) efforts to injure Buddha and cause divisions among his disciples. The subjects of the third volume are not found in the Pāli Vinaya, but appear in its Sutta-pitaka. Thus, the Sarvāstivādins mixed up the Sūtra and Vinaya while the Theravadins kept them separate. The belief current up to now that the one is a redaction of the other is baseless. Both have come from a common source, and by reason of development in different centres, minor accretions have grown round them creating differences in their exterior. The commonness of the names of places, where the various scenes mentioned in the Vinaya are laid, supports the above inference while the mention of Kashmir in connection with its conversion to Buddhism found only in the Sarvāstivāda version speaks a good deal in favour of the aforesaid probability of the existence of a close connection between this school and Kashmir<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Asiatic Researches, Vol. xx, leaf 115 of the Tibetan Dulva.

I Such as Rājagṛha, Śrāvastī, Sāketa, Vārāṇasī, Vaisālī, and Campā. Asiatic Researches, Vol. xx, p.

versions: Vinaya-vastu, Vol. I, leaves 1-193 contain the subject of entering into the religious order—Pravra-jita-vastu corresponding with Mahākhandhaka pathama of the Pāli Vinaya, Vol. I, p. 98.

Leaves 193-357 contain "the description of the confession or self-emendation, and general supplication" corresponding with the Pāli Uposatha-khandhaka.

Leaves 357-378 "on passing the Vassa" corresponding with Vassupanāyika-khandhaka tatīya (Vinaya, I, p. 158) and Pavārana-khandhaka (Ibid., p. 178).

Yuan Chwang informs us that the Sarvāstivādins of some places allowed the use of the three kinds of pure flesh and the drink of grape syrup as beverage, which was contrary to the principles of Mahāyānism of which he was an adherent. In the Vinaya of the Sarvāstivādins as well as of the Theravādins the eating of meat with some restrictions was allowed by the orthodox<sup>1</sup>. The Sarvāstivādins had a peculiar mode of wearing and colouring their robes not approved by the followers of several schools<sup>2</sup>.

Leaves 378-408 (end of the vol.) and leaves I—10 (of the next vol.) "on the subject of leather and skin" corresponding with Cammakkhandhakam pañcamam. (Ibid., I, p. 198).

The second volume of the Dulva contains the chapter on medicaments (leaves 11-78) and garments of priests (leaves 78 ff.) corresponding with Bhesajjakkhandhakam (I, p. 251) and Kathinakkhandhakam and Civarakkhandhakam (Ibid., pp. 265-310).

- I Watters' Yuan Chwang, I, pp. 53, 60; Körösi's analysis in the Asiatic Researches, Vol. xx, p. 67 and Vinaya, Mahāvagga, vi, 31, 14. The admissibility of grape-syrup as a drink is found only in a quotation given by Watters. See Watters, op. cit. pp. 237 ff.
- 2 Watters, op. cit., I, pp. 150ff. Takak usu, I-tsing.

It is the Abhidharma literature of the Sarvāstivāda school that deserves special attention.

- Abhidharma. able service by furnishing us with the contents of the seven abhidharma books at present unique and preserved in Chinese translations. The number of books in this collection is just the same is in that of the Theravādins, the difference being that the latter collection consists of seven independent works while the former of one principal treatise the Jānaprasthāna Sūtra of Kātyāyanī-putra with its six pādas or supplements. They are,—
  - (1) Sangīti-paryāya of Mahākauṣṭhila,
  - (2) Dhātu-kāya of Pūrņa,
  - (3) Prajnapti-sāra of Maudgalyāyana,
  - (4) Dharma-skandha of Sārīputra,
  - (5) Vijñāna-kāya of Devasarman, and
  - (6) Prakaraņa-pāda of Vasumitra.

Prof. Takakusu on a comparison of the Abhidharma works of the two schools comes to the conclusion that the "two sets have no real connection." Though there is no apparent connection between the two sets, yet it is clearly noticeable that most of the subjects treated in the two sets are found in the Sūtrapitaka but the mode of treatment in one is different from that of the other. The first pada reveals a close relation of the Abhidharma works of the Sarvāstivādins to the Suttas of the Theravadins. Prof. Takakusu hints that the first pāda, Sangīti-paryāya, has been modelled on the Sangīti-suttanta of the Dīgha-Nikāya1. He remarks that "the contents of the ones, twos, threes, etc. (in the suttanta and paryāya) are usually different." But it should be pointed out that the contents do agree with one another except that the instances of ones, twos, threes, etc., as given in the Pali text exceed greatly in number those of the other as explained below2

<sup>1 &</sup>quot;The Abhidharma Literature of the Sarvāstivādins" by Prof. Takakusu in J.P.T.S., 1904-5, pp. 67-146; see also his article on the Sarvāstivādins in E.R.E., xi.

<sup>2</sup> J.P.T.S., 1904-5, pp. 74ff.

If a text on account of its pithy baldness be

- I Dīgh., Nik., III, Suttanta No. xxxiii.
- 2 E.g. (1) Section on Eka-dharmas:—
  All beings live on food, etc.,—Takakusu's contents.

  Sabbe sattā āhāratthitikā.

Sabbe sattā sankhāratthitikā. (Dīgh. Nik., Vol. III, p. 211).

(2) Section on Dvi-dharmas :-

37

considered earlier than another on an identical topic presented at length with much elaboration of details, then the  $P\bar{a}dc$  should be regarded as anterior in age to the Suttanta. The statement of Prof. Takakusu giving an earlier origin to the Suttanta cannot from this standpoint be regarded Mind and matter—(Takakusu). Nāma-rūpa—(Dīgh. Nik.).

Means for entering into meditation and coming out of meditation, etc. corresponding with Nos. i and ix of the Sangīti Suttanta, I, 9. The Suttanta enumerates 33 Dvi-dharmas.

(3) Section on Tri-dharmas:

Prof. Takakusu's list can be identified with the following numbers of the Suttanta, i, ii, iii, v, vi, xi, xxvi, xxviii, xxxvi, xxxvii, lviii, except the three āpattivyuṭṭhānas. In the former list, the total number is 36 whereas in the Suttanta, it is 60.

(4) Section on Catur-dharmas:

Prof. Takakusu gives us only 7 fours out of the total 21 fours; 5 of the fours correspond with the following numbers of the Suttanta i, ii, vi, xv, xlvii; the number of fours in the latter is 50.

In this way all the ten dharmas can be traced but it will be noticed that the Suttanta list is much longer than the Pāda list.

as unimpeachable. His next remark that the "work was compiled after the council of Vesali which was held chiefly for suppressing the ten theses of the Vajjian bhikkhus," based on a passage of the Pada referring to the Vajjian bhikkhus of Pāvā, does not rest on a sound basis. Mr. Wogihara was right in rendering the passage to the effect that it was Nigantha Nātaputta of Pāvā, and not the Vajjian bhikkhus1. The Vajjian bhikkhus, again, were inhabitants of Vesāli and not of Pāvā, the residents of which place, namely the Mallas, were partly followers of Nigantha Nātaputta and partly of Buddha. The object of Sāriputta in putting the dharma as the summation of a few metaphysical and religious truths for its followers was to avert the danger of a split in the Buddhist church as had happened in the Jaina sangha just at that time2. The close correspondence between the Suttanta and the specially in their introductory and Paryāya concluding passages shows that one is based upon the other and that the author is the same for both. Prof. Takakusu preferred the tradition which ascribed the authorship to kausthila but the coincidence of the other tradition (ascribing it to Sāriputta) with that of the Sangīti Suttanta leads us to infer that Sāriputta was the author of the work.

I J.P.T.S., 1904-5, p. 99, fn.

<sup>2</sup> Dīgh. Nik., Vol. III, p. 210.

The fourth  $P\bar{a}da$ , the Dharma-skandha, is said in the colophon to its Chinese translation to be "the most important of the Abhidharma works, and the fountain-head of the Sarvāstivāda system." The subjects treated contain nothing which can be claimed by the Sarvāstivāda as its own. They constitute the essence of Buddhism and if the claim of the Sarvāstivādins be admitted, that of the Theravādins of a similar nature cannot be denied an equal force on the same ground. It is only natural that, as Prof. Takakusu points out, the Sangīti-Paryāya should often quote this book, traversing as they do the same ground.

Thirteen sections, again, of the above book are found in the seventh section of the Prakarana  $p\bar{a}da$ , "discussions on one thousand questions"<sup>2</sup>, the author of which is Vasumitra. I think that as Vasumitra was a Sarvāstivādin, the section was meant to be a supplement discussing the exposition embodied in the Dharma-skandha.

The composition of the second  $p\bar{a}da$ ,  $Dh\bar{a}tu$ -

<sup>1</sup> J.P.T.S., 1904-5, p. 115.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., p. 106.

 $k\bar{a}ya$ , is attributed to either Vasumitra or Pūrņa according to different traditions. Preference should be given to the former tradition in view of the fact that this  $P\bar{a}da$  is only an enlarged treatment of the topics contained in section 4 of the  $Prakarana-p\bar{a}da$  of Vasumitra.

The fifth Pāda, Vijnāna-kāya, is said to have been the work of Deva-sarman, an arahat of Viśoka (near Kauśāmbī) who lived some time before the 5th century after Buddha' parinirvāņa. Yuan Chwang informs us that Deva-sarman refuted the views of Moginlin (Moggalana) who denied the reality of past and future1, one of the chief principles of the Sarvāstivāda doctrine. This remark of Yuan Chwang finds support in the fact that the first section of this pada records the opinion of Maudgalyāyana about pudgalas, indriyas, etc., the next section containing inter alia a discussion of the theory of pudgala2 (soul). This work was highly appreciated by the Vaibhāṣikas who gave it a canonical position which was denied to it by the Sautrantikas3.

The third Pāda, Prajnapti-sāra4, gives an

<sup>1</sup> Watters, Yuan Chwang, I, p. 373.

<sup>2</sup> J.P.T.S., 1904-5, p. 108.

<sup>3</sup> Watters, op. cit., p. 374.

<sup>4</sup> J.P.T.S., 1904-5.

294

account of the life of Buddha, and its authorship has been ascribed to Mahā-Maudgalyāyana.

The Sarvāstivādins, as stated already, were like the Theravadins, a conservative school of They held almost the Hinayana. Doctrines. the same views as the Theravadins and believed in the non-existence of soul, impermanence of material composites, the law of karma, and nirvana as "the cessation of passions (kleśas) to be attained by transcendental knowledge1". Their views about the human life and the universe were also similar to those of the Theravadins. Their chief exponent Katyāyanīputra in his Jnana-prasthana-sūtra accepts in every detail "the theory of the five skandhas, the twelve ayatanas, the eighteen dhatus, the chain of causation, the three twelve-linked worlds (kāma, rūpa, and arūpa dhātu), the four classes of birth (andaja, samsvedaja, jarāyuja, and aupapāduka) and the four cycles (antarakalpa, mahākalpa, sārakalpa, and śunyakalpa)"2. The only difference between the doctrines of of the Therathe Sarvāstivādins and those vadins lies in this that the former admitted the reality of the elements (skandhas) that compose a being as against the latter's view of their unreality. Both the schools admitted the continual flux of elements or in other words the momentary existence (ksanikatva) of every composite thing with this difference that the one looked upon the elements of the past as disappearing to give rise to the present and the present as giving rise to the future, while the other believed that the elements of the past underwent changes to develop into the present and the present developed into the future. In short, the Sarvāstivādins admitted the reality of elements as existing in all times, -past, present, and future. On account of their belief in the astitva theory of elements, they have analysed the material composites into various classes of elements which they have enumerated in connection with the exposition of their philosophy1. It appears from the Lalitavistara, a treatise originally belonging to the Sarvāstivādins, that the theory of paticcasamuppāda (chain causation) found much favour with this school and particularly for proving impermanence and soullessness of beings. In Buddhological specu-

<sup>1</sup> Yamakami Sogen's Systems of Buddhistic Thought, p. 165.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., p. 178.

I For the analysis, see Sogen, op. cit. pp. 119ff. and Kimura's Original and Developed Doctrines etc. pp. 12ff.

296 SCHOOLS OF BUDDHISM

lations, the Sarvāstivādins looked upon Buddha as a man possessing divine attributes as opposed to the Mahāsanghikas who believed Buddha to have had but an illusory existence in this world<sup>1</sup>.

1 See ante, pp. 245, 246.

The Sammitiya School

The Sāmmitīyas were one of the four principal schools of Buddhism. They became the most influential and wide-spread by the time of Yuan Chwang. This was mainly due to the patronage that it could secure from the emperor Harsavardhana whose sister Rājyaśrī was a bhikkhunī of this school. Previous to this period, the history of the school was not so eventful. Only its 'pudgala-theory' drew forth vehement criticisms from the adherents of other schools, and was taken up by the Kathāvatthu as the first question to be refuted by arguments favouring the Theravāda standpoint.

According to the tradition preserved in the Bhinna-nikāya-dharma-cakra-śāstra¹ by Vasu-

Time of emergence of the school.

mitra, this school originated in the third century after Buddha's parinibbāṇa. It branched off from the Vātsiputriyas for which it was at times called the Vātsiputriyaexisted in Asoka's time. The next early evidence as to the existence of this school is furnished by the inscription of the early Gupta period discovered at Sarnath. This inscription also shows that the first school that prevailed at Sarnath was that of the Theravadins. It was supplanted by the Sarvastivadins at about 300 A. D. About a century afterwards this school again was ousted by the Sammitayas who continued till the time of Yuan Chwang<sup>1</sup>. The Sammitayas could not prosper in the pre-Christian era but they gradually attained importance in Northern India during the Gupta period reaching climax in the reign of Harsavardhana.

Sāmınitīyas2. The notice taken of its doctrines

I Translated from Chinese by Prof. J. Masuda in the C. U. Journal of Letters, I, p. 2.

<sup>2</sup> E.R.E., XI, p. 168.

From the figures supplied by Yuan Chwang regarding the number of Sāmmitīya monks in various places, it will be seen that though they resided in Ahicchatra, Sankassa, Hayamukha, Visoka, Benares, Karnasuvarna etc., they had their predominance in Malwa, Sind¹ and the neighbouring places, such as Ānandapura, A-tien-p'o, Pi-to-shih-lo and A-fan-tu. The name

I Dayaram Sahni's Catalogue of the Museum at Saranath, p. 30; Ep. Indica, VIII, p. 172.

<sup>2</sup> The number of Sāmmitīya bhikkus in Malwa and Sind was 20,000 and 10,000 respectively.

Avantaka applied to the Sāmmitīya school by Vasumitra shows that its centre in Northern Avantī i. e. Malwa must have been very important. The ascription of the origin of this school to Mahākaccāyana, the famous missionary of Avantī, also shows that it must have had some connection with Malwa at the time of its emergence.

The Sāmmitīyas, according to the Tibetan tradition, possessed a pīţaka in the Apabhramśa dialect. Modern philologists hold that the Saurasenī-Apabhraṃsa which prevailed in Malwa and Gujarat was the standard Apabhraṃsa dialect and that it was different from the pure Saurasenī. It was here that the few Jaina texts now existing in the Apabhraṃśa dialect were written. It is very probable that the Sāṃmitīyas, who had a pitaka of their own handed down orally from generation to generation, committed it to writing when they flourished in the Gupta period, using as their medium the dialect prevalent in the place i. e. the Apabhraṃśa.

<sup>1</sup> Rockhill, Life of the Buddha, pp. 182, 194; Wassiljew, Der Buddhismus, p. 85.

The statement that Yuan Chwang carried to China fifteen treatises of this school shows that it had a literature of its own. I-tsing observes that it had a separate Vinaya, but it is not mentioned in Nanjio's Catalogue. Incidentally he tells us that this Vinaya had rules regulating the use of the undergarment, girdle, remedies and beds by the members of the sect in a way peculiar to itself2. The only treatise that is expressly mentioned as belonging to this school in Nanjio's Catalogue and now existing in Chinese translation is the Sāmmitīya-śāstra or Sāmmitīya-nikāya-śāstra containing the tenets of the sect2. Most of the passages cited in the Kathāvatthu as giving the view of the Sāmmitīya school have been found to be identical with passages on the subject in the Pali Sutta-pitaka. From this it seems probable that the Suttapitaka of the Sāmmitīyas was a redaction of the original piṭaka from which the Pāli piṭaka has been derived.

For information regarding the doctrines of the Sāmmitīya school, we have now to depend upon works belonging to the rival schools of the

I Watters, Yuan Chwang, I, pp. 20, 21.

<sup>2</sup> Takakusu, 1-tsing, pp. 7, 66, 140.

<sup>3</sup> E. R. E., Vol. XI.

Theravadins and the Sarvastivadins, viz., the Kathāvatthu, the Abhidharmakoşavyākhyā, and the Vijnana-kaya-śastra1. The only Doctrines. remarkable doctrine of the Sammitīyas is that regarding the nature of the 'pudgala'. They admitted the impermanence of material composites but at the same time held the view that there was an entity which should be distinguished from the five skandhas but which could not exist independently of those skandhas. This entity corresponds to what is called soul in Hindu philosophy but very different from it, as it in their opinion ceased to exist when the five skandhas came to an end. It served as the carrier of the five skandhas through births and re-births of beings as the Sāmmitīyas held that there is an antarābhāva i. e. an intermediate state between the death of a being and its re-birth2. They agreed with the Sarvāstivādins and the Mahāsanghikas in hold-

I The substance of the last two works is found in Prof. Stcherbatsky's Soul Theory of the Buddhists and Yamakami Sogen's Systems of Buddhistic Thought.

2 E. R. E., XI, pp. 168ff. For details about the psychological views of this school, see Mrs. Rhys Davids' Points of the Controversy, Intro., pp. xviii, xix.

302

SCHOOLS OF BUDDHISM

ing that the stage of an arahat is not immune from a fall to a lower stage and that the spiritual progress of a convert is always gradual.

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

INDEX

Abhaya, 157 Abhayarājakumāra, 57, 73, 89n, 90, 92, 125 abhidhamma, 217, 235; Sarvāstivādin, 288ff abhidhammika, 206, 207 Abhidharmakosavyākhyā, 275, 301 ācariya, 112 Ācariyavāda, 234 Acelakassapa, 103 ādesanā, 67 Āgamas (= Nikāyas), 277, 279 āgatāgama, 209 Aggañña Suttanta, Buddhist cosmology in, 10-11 Aggika-bharadvāja, 135, 137 Aggivessana, 61 ahimsā doctrine, 7-8, 22 Ajātasattu, 82, 84, 88, 89n, 96, 107, 123 Ajitakesakambalin, 84, 91 Ājīvika, 49, 65, 133 Alavi, 154 Ambalatthikā, 125 Ambapāli, 73, 76, 126, 161

Ambattha, 59, 60 Ānanda, 29, 71, 73, 74, 92, 96, 103, 157, 159, 182, 187, 201, 204ff; training of, 106 Anāthapindika, 73, 76, 118, 122, 132, 143, 170, 171; spread of Buddhism in Kosala helped by, 143 Andhakavinda, 92, 127 Andhavana, 153 Aiga, 76; Buddha's activities in, 170, 171; religious condition of, 169, 170; Vinaya rules framed in, 172-3 Angulimāla, conversion of, 71, 144 Āniyatā, 152 Añjanavana at Sāketa, 153 Anuruddha, 73, 96, 103, 204; training of, 105 apabhramsa, 252, 299 Āpana, 170 Aparanta, 185, 189, 190 Aparaseliyas, 229 arahat, position of, 229, 233

304

INDEX

arahathood and Buddhahood, 247-8 araññakūtikas, 99 ascetic practices, Buddha's attitude towards, 16, 18n Asibandhakaputtagāmanī, 90, 125 Asita, 187 Asoka, 27, 31, 46, 270, 271; Mahinda's connexion with, 262; Theravadins patronized by, 268 Assaji, 87 Assalāyana, 56 Assapura, 170 Atthaka, 4, 13 austerities and ritualism in Buddhism, 214-5 Avantaka, another name of Sāmmitīya, 299 Avantī, 68, 116, 183ff; Mahinda's connexion with, 261-2 Bāvari, 139, 142 Belatthaputta. See Sanjaya Benares, 93. See Kāśi Bhaddā Kapilāni, 193, 194 Bhaddavaggiya youths, 101, 13In Bhaddiya, 103, Bhaggas, 74, 155; Buddha among, 164-5

Bhaggava, a paribbājaka, 160 Bhagu, 73, 103 Bhallika, 173 bhānakas, ii, 208 Bharukaccha, 185 Bhesakalāvana, near Sumsumāragiri, 75 Bhikkhunī-pātimokkha, 151-2 Bimbisāra, 69-70, 84, 88-9, 94, 96, 99, 100-1, 115, 171 Bodhirājakumāra of the Bhaggas, 75, 164 bodhisattva, theory of, 246-7 brāhmaņas, conversion of, 120 127, 136-140, 164, 171, 188, 192, 194; 175, Buddha and, 38, 85-7; whether superior to kṣatrivas, II brāhmaņa villages, Kosalan, 140 ; Magadhan, 127 ; Sakyan, 147 brahmanic faith, bases of, 4 brāhmaņism, toleration of, 3-4; two main bases of, 12-3; Buddha's opposition to, 3ff Brahmāyu, a distinguished brāhmaņa, 164 Buddha, personality of, 6-7,27; on caste-system, 9 ff; on sacrifices, 46ff; on magical

practices, 15; on selfmortifications and ascetic practices, 16; brāhmaņas and, 4, 38, 85-7, 134-6; Jainas and, 88-91; the four non-brāhmanical teachers and, 91ff; first converts ed by, 53-4; missionary idea of, 44, 176; works on the life of, 278

Buddhahood and arahathood, 247-8

Buddhism, internal forces in the spread of, 2 ff; external forces in the spread of, 27ff; attraction of, 22-6; a proselytising religion, 40 ff; patronized by, 68 ff; catholic spirit of, 48-50; gradual course of training in, 47-8; rationality in, 22-3; a cause of decline of, 34

Buddhist sangha, leader of, Cunda Kammaraputta, 167 201; no supreme headship in, 199-203; unity in, 199, 200; how differences settled in, 202-3.

Bulis of Allakappa, 75 Caityavādins, 243 Campā, 169, 170ff

Canda Pajjota of Avanti, 72, 187 Cañki, a brāhmaņa teacher, 64, Cāpāla cetiya of Vesāli, 162 Caste system, Buddha on, 9 ff Cātumā, 147 of,174ff; disputations allow- Cave-dwellings at Rajagaha, 97ff Cedi, 181 cetiyas at Vesāli, 159 Ceylon, Mahinda's connexion with, 261-2 Ciñcā-mānavikā, 134 conversion, evangelical method of, 42; defeat in disputation led to, 55-6, 63-5; stigma no in, 63-4; methods employed 47ff Corapapāta, 97 cosmology, Buddhist Brāhmanic, 10-11 council of Kaniska, 268-270 Dabba Mallaputta, 99, 167, 210 Dakkhināgiri, 92, 127

Dandakappaka, 140

Devadatta, 73, 89n, 96, 103,

204, 222, 288; training of,

Devadaha, 147

107

INDEX

dhammakathikas, 208ff Dharmaskandha of the Sarvāstivádins, 288, 292 dhūta-precepts, 215 dhūtavādas, 189 dhyāna, experiences of, 53-4 dialectical differences, factor for the origin of schools, 214 disciples, Buddhism preached by, 20ff; grouping 203-7 discourses, four ways of delivering, 58 Dīghatapassi, a Jaina monk, 56, 90, 125 Dīghanakha, a paribbājaka, 101-2 disputation, allowed by Buddha, 53ff; essential for a missionary, 54-5; an illustration of, 60-2; conversion of the vanquished in, 63-4 dissensions in the sangha, Buddha's apprehension for, 217ff; occurring in Buddha's life-time, 220ff; remedies suggested by Buddha to avoid, 217ff; of Devadatta, 222-3 ekāmsavādin, 249, 250

Ekanālā, a brāhmaņa village, 85, 127 Ekottarāgāma, 237 Esukāri, 64 foot-wear, use of, 116 Gāryha, 152 Gayā, 93, 94 Gayāsīsa, 93, 123, 222 Ghotamukha brāhmana, 31, 64 Gijjhakūtapabbata, 96 Gomatakandara, 97 Gosingasā lavana, 159 Home of Paisacī, Mahinda's connexion with, 261-5 Icchānangala, 140 Indasālaguhā, 94 initiation, rules of, 111-2, 148-6 Isigilipasse Kālasīlā, 97 Isipatana, a centre of Buddhism, 177, 178 Jaina laity, conversion of, 49, Janussoni, 137, 140, 141 Tātakas, 235-6 Jațilas, 57, 64, 88; conversion of, 93-4 Jetavana, 152 Jivaka, 73, 123, 124; ambavana of, 100 Sūtra, 288, Jñānaprasthāna 294

Kajangala in Anga, 169, 170, Kālakārāma of Sāketa, 153 Kālasoka, 243 Kallavālamuttagāma, 92, 101, 127, 128 Kammassadhamma, 190 Kanhāyanas, origin of, 59 Kaniska, 46; council of, 268-270, Sarvāstivādins patronized by, 268 Kannakujja, 187 Kantakivana of Sāketa, 53 Kapilavatthu, Buddha's visit to, 103, 130, 131, 147-8, 161 Karnasuvarna, 223 Kāśi, Buddhism in, 173; brāhmanic culture in, 173 Kasmir, 30, 286 Kassapas, 57 Kathina ceremony, 151 Katyāyanīputra, 289 Khānumata, 85 Khemā, queen of Bimbisāra, 193, 194 Khomadussa, 148 Kimbila, 73, 103; training of, Koliyas, 74, 155, 165; Buddha among, 165-6 Kosala, 68; introduction of Buddhism into, 130-4; brāhmaņism in, 130, 136; topics of the discourses delivered in, 136; whether outside the limits of orthodox brāhmaņism, 129-130 . Kosambī, 179, 180; division at, 221 Kotigama, 126 ksatriyas, whether superior to brāhmanas, 11 Kukkuţa-ārāma of Pātaliputta, 126 Kukkutavatī of the Madda country, 194 Kuru country, centre of brāhmanic culture, 36, 37, 182, 190; Buddha in, 190ff Kururaghara-papāta-pabbata, Kusinārā, 74, 166 kutūhalasālā, 55, 102 Kūţadanta, 5, 56, 84, 85 kūṭatarka in Buddhist works, 59-60 ladies, spread of Buddhism helped by,75-7; conversion of, 120 lay-society, formation of a Buddhist, 17, 118ff; spread of Buddhism helped by,

118, 122

308

INDEX

Licchavis, 74; Brāhmanism among, 155-6; Jainism among, 156-8; Buddhism among, 158ff Lohicca, 138 Lokottaravādins, 238, 243 Madda country, 193; verts from, 193-4 Madhurā, 182, 185, 186; Avantiputta of, 188 Magadha, brāhmanic unorthodoxy in, 36ff; religious views in, 13-4, Buddhism in, 82ff, 92ff Magadhabhāsā, Buddha preached in, 252, 254.5 Magical practices, Buddha's views on, 16 Māgandiya, 180, 192 Mahācunda of Cedi, 181 Mahādeva, articles of faith of, 230ff Mahākaccāyana, 29, 57, 72, 177, 187, 204ff, 212, 257ff, 299; founder of the centre in Avanti, 187ff Madda Mahākappina, a prince, 100, 193, 194 Mahākassapa, 64, 96, 99, 127, 194, 204ff, 239

Mahākausthila, 288

Mahākotthila, 57, 177, 178

Mahāli, a Licchavi, 150 Mahānāma, 146, 158, 159 Mahāpajāpati Gotamī, 74, 161 mahāsālas, 138 Mahāsanghikas, tenets 229; rules of discipline of. 226-7, 236, 237; literature of, 236-8; linguistic medium of, 239; centres of influence of, 239ff; democratic spirit of, 232-3; doctrines of, 244ff Mahāvana-kūtāgārasālā, 159 Mahāvira, 7, 125 Mahinda, 261-5 Majjhantika, 270 majjhima-desa, 183, 184. See mid-land Makkhali Gosāla, 84, 91, 92, 133 Mallas, 74; Buddha among, 166ff; discourses delivered among, 167-8. Malla Roja, 167; conversion of, 68-9 Mallikā, a queen of Pasenadi, 142 mātikādhara, 208 Medalumpa, 147 medicaments, rules of, 151 meditations, Buddhist works on, 18

mettā feeling, 8, 9, 22 mid-land, brāhmanic, 36-7 miracles, competition in, 90; interdicted by Buddha, 67 Mithilä, 163 missionary work, not known the Hindus, 42; a Nissayas, 113, 114 radical departure made by the Buddhists, 43ff Moggalāna, 28, 64, 84, 96, 159, 164, 177, 204ff, 217. 288 Moggaliputta Tissa, 45, 271 monasteries, rules of building, 99, 100 monks, formation of groups of, 207-11; programme of life of, 17 Moriyas of Pipphalivana, 75 mortifications, Buddha's views on, 16ff, 146 Nādikā, 126 Nāgasena, conversion of, 51 Nālaka (= Mahākaccāyana), 187 Nālandā, 90, 92, 125 Nanda, 41, 73, 103; training of, 105 Nandatherī, 240 Niddesa, 234, 236 Nigantha Nātaputta, 57, 84, 88-91, 144, 146, 157, 170,

200; among the Sākyas, 146-8 Nikāyas, ii, iii Nirvāṇa, signification of, 20, Nissaggiya, 117, 152, 163 Northern countries, spread of Buddhism in, 190ff nuns, order of, 76-7, 160-1 occult powers, a factor in the spread of a religion, 77-82 origin of Buddhist schools, factors peculiar to, 199ff paccantima janapada, 183, 184, 212 Pacittiya, 117, 163, 165, 181 Pādas, a study of, 289ff Paiśācī, home of, 259; basic dialect of Pali, 257-260 Pakudha Kaccayana, 84, 91 Pāli language, iii, 256; origin of, 250 ff; literary form of Paiśācī, 264-5 pañcanekāyīka, 209 Pañcasālā, 85 Pārājīkā, 117, 152, 163 Pārāsāriya brāhmaņa. of Kajangala, 169 paribbājaka, 55, 95, 120; students as, 64; of Kosala,

:310

INDEX

140-2; spread of Buddhism helped by, 63-5 paribbājakārāma, 55, 102, 140; in Anga, 170 Parivāra, 235 Pasenadi of Kosala, 61, 70-1, 90, 132, 171, 193; follower religion, of brāhmanic 142; conversion of, 142 Pāţaliputta, 92, 126 Pātheyya, 184 Pāţidesanīya, 117 Pātimokkha, 115, 116, 129, 151-2, 163, 181, 212, 281-2 Patisambhidā, 235, 236 pavāraņā, 150 Payagapatithanam, 187 Pāyāsi, instructed by Buddha, 5 Pitakas, based upon one common original, 253 ff Pindola Bharadvāja, 45, 57, 180 Pīpphaliguhā, 98 Pokkharasādi, 64, 138, 171 Prācya-desa, predominance of kṣatriyas in, 39; Buddhism confined to, 182 ff Prajñāpti-sāra, 288, 293 Prakaraņa-pāda, 292 preachers, tenacity, perseverance and tolerant spirit of, 47, 50

preaching, rules of, 67-8; Buddha's zeal in, 44; merit of, 42; ways of, 65-7 precepts, rules of, 149 proselytism, duty of monks, 40; outcome of metta, 41 Pubbārāma, 144, 153 Pubbaseliyas, 229 pudgala theory, 297, 301-2 Punna, 118, 190 Punna Mantaniputta, 29, 50, 96, 204ff, 258, 288; praised by Buddha, 51; missionary of Śronaparantaka, 50-I Purāņa Kassapa, 84, 91, 92 puratthima janapada, 129, 130 Rājagaha, 83, 94ff, Rājyaśrī, sister of Harṣa, 297 Rāhula, 103, 125-149, 204ff; training of, 104; founder of the Sarvāstivāda school, 282-3 conversion of, Ratthapāla, 191-2 ritualism and austerities, 214-6 Roruka, 90, 184, 189, 190 Rudraka Rāmaputra, 83 Rudrāyaņa, king of Roruka, conversion of, 90, 190 Sabarādi mlecchabhāṣā, 252

Saccaka, a Jaina, 60ff, 157 sacrifice, Buddha's attitude towards, 2ff, 84 Sadānirā, 38, 130, 169 Sāgala, 193, 194 Sahajāti in Cedi, 181 Sāketa, 153, 154 Sakulūdāyi, 56, 64, 82, 102, 103 Sākyas, 73-4; brāhmanism among, 145-6; origin of, 59; Jainism among, 146-8; conversion of, 145ff 76, Sāmāvatī, queen, 72, 280 Sāmmitīyas, 207, 251, 267, 297ff; doctrines of, 300-2; centres of influence of, 291ff; language of, 299sangha, internal strength of, 32ff sanghabheda, defined, 218ff; distinguished from sangharāji, 219-220 Sanghādisesa, 117, 152, 181 sangharāji. See sanghabheda sanghatthera, 202, 203n Sangīti-paryāya and suttanta, 288, 289-292. Sanjaya Belatthaputta, 57, 83-4, 87-8, 101, 102 Sankassa, 183, 187

Sanskrit, language of the Sarvāstivādins, 274-6 Sāriputta, 28, 45, 57, 64, 84, 96, 97, 101, 132, 159, 177, 204ff, 296ff Sarvāstivāda school, language of, 274-6, literature of, 277ff; doctrines of, 294-6; of influence centres 272-4 Sattahakaraniya, rule of. 150 Sattapanni, 97 Sautrāntikas, 211 Sāvatthi, missionary work at, 117 schools, origin of, 197ff; chart of, 224 Sekhiya, 152, 165 Sīha, 73, 158 sīmā, 115 Sindhubhāsā, 252 Sappasondikappa-Sītavana bbhara, 97 Sonadanda, 56, 169, 171 Sona Kolivisa of Anga, 116, 172 Sona Kutikanna, 188ff Soreyya, 187 Srenis, 121 Sronāparāntaka, 51 suicides, religious, 192.3

312

INDEX

Licchaviputta, Sunakkhatta 160 Suppāraka, 206 Sutraists, 185 Suttantikas, 207, 210, 211 Tapodārāma, 98 Theravadins, 211, 219, 228, 240, 249ff Thullakotthita, 190 Tinduka-kandara, 98 tipetakin, 209 training, gradual course of, 47-8 Trapusa, 173 Tripitaka, original language of, 250 Udāyi, 131 Udena of Kosambi, 31, 72, 76, 180 Ujjeni, 183ff; home of Pāli in, 256ff Ukkala, 174 Ukkattha, 131, 154 Upagupta, 31 upājjhāya, 112; distinguished from ācariya (s. v.), 149 Upāli, 56, 90, 96, 103, 204ff; a Jaina, 135 upāsakas, society of, 139-140; society uposatha, 115

Uruvela, 44, 93; Kassapa of, 94 Vacchagotta, a paribbājaka, Vaibhāsika, 266, 270 Vaisyas, Buddhism helped by, 121, 122 Vajjians, 31, 155, 184, 233 Vajjiputtakas, 240 Vāmadeva, 4 Vāmaka, 13 Vappa, a Sakyan Jaina, conversion of, 147 Vāsabhakhattiyā, 71 vassavāsa, 116, 150 Vasumitra, 262, 288 Vatsa country, 68; Buddha in, 179-180 Vedas, Buddha's views II2 Vekhanassa, 56, 64, 141 Veluvana, 90, 99, 100 Verañja, 182ff; Buddha at, 185-6 Vesāli, missionary work at, 60, 74, 117; Buddha's last visit to, 161-2; Vinaya rules framed at, 162ff Vessāmitta, 5, 13 duties of, 164. See lay- Vibbajjavādins, another name of Theravadins, 249, 250 Vibhāṣā śāstrās, 266, 269

Videha, 47, 155; Buddhism in, 163 vihāra. See monasteries Vijñānakāya, 288, 293, 301 Vimalaprabhā, a ms., 251, 254 Vinaya, five divisions of, 283; of different schools, 280; of the Sarvāstivādins. 280ff; of the Mahāsanghikas, 226-7; comparative study of, 284ff Vinayadhara, 207ff Vinayists, 206ff

Vinaya rules, abolition of minor, 213; elasticity of, 211-4; framing of, 108-9; for bhikkhuṇis, 151; of Devadatta, 222
Visākhā, 73, 76, 144, 153
Western countries, progress of Buddhism in, 184ff worship of deities, Buddha's views on, 14
Vasa, 30, 73, 101, 176
yoga, 80; simple form approved by Buddha, 18-19, 25

ERRATA

Read Internal Forces
Read VII for VI.
Read monarchs
Read Buddha's
Read physician
,, disciples
Read Kālakārāma
Read Anga
Read Mahākaccāyana
Read development
Delete 'and'
Read developed

Printed by N. C. Paul, Esqr. at the Calcutta Oriental Press, 107, Mechuabazar Street, Calcutta.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WORKS BY

DR. NARENDRA NATH LAW,
M. A., B. L., P. R. S., PH. D.

- 1. Studies in Ancient Hindu Polity, Vol. I
- 2. Promotion of Learning in India
  (By Early European Settlers)
- 3. Promotion of Learning in India
  (During Muhammadan Rule by Muhammadans)
- 4. Aspects of Ancient Indian Polity
- 5. Inter-State Relations in Ancient India, pt. I
- 6. Indan Historical Miscellany

To be had of :

The Calcutta Oriental Press 207, Mechuabazar Street, Calcutta. Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri SAMPLE STOCK VERIFICATION

1989

Signification

Signification

Signification

